100-Year Old Delhi Business To Close Doors

By Mary A. Crisafulli

DELHI - The 100-year-old business, Delhi Paint & Paper, 100 Main Street, Delhi, will close its doors in February. Harold Eustis and Jane Curley have owned and operated the business since 1986 and are ready to retire.

Delhi Paint & Paper was established as a Benjamin Moore paint dealer in the 1920s. The store has had four owners over the years, each one authorized by Benjamin Moore. Other aspects to the shop were added during Eustis and Curley's ownership, including paint and supplies, art supplies, picture framing, window and screen repair, and furniture.

"We have been very lucky to have the relationships and support by the community and other industries," said Curley. "That's what it took to be successful."

Eustis and Curley have been walking to work for the past 32 years, and over the last many years with their Labrador Retriever, Audrey. Audrey typically sits by the steps ready to greet customers as they walk in the door. "Audrey doesn't know she's retiring yet," said Curley with a laugh, "She will miss the socialization, poor thing."

Curley grew up in Delhi and wanted to move back to the area. The two were living in Rockland County at the time, where Eustis was managing a paint shop and Curley was a music teacher. The previous owner, Constance Moxley, a friend of Curley and Eustis, was ready to sell and the couple headed back to Delhi. "We are happy to have done it," said Curley.

In retirement, the two plan to visit their children more and fix up their home.

Dubben Brothers Hardware, a few doors down at 90 Main Street, will take over the 100-year-old Benjamin Moore paint business. Curley and Eustis will assist Dubben with the transition. Curley said Dubben has what is needed to handle this type of work.

The picture framing business remains for sale with equipment, inventory, and supplies. The rest of the inventory will be sold before closing.

Curley and Eustis sold the building about three years ago and suspect the owners will seek other business leases for the storefront.

Various Strategies That Are Vital For Healthy Eyes

Eyesight is easily taken for granted. But when something goes awry, the value of strong eyesight is crystal clear. Once diminished sight occurs, it is very difficult to get it back without serious intervention — if at all. That is why it is so vital to keep eyes healthy and functioning at their peak.

Eye care involves regular vision checkups but also includes other components. The following tips can keep most people on the path to healthy eyes.

- Eat for healthy vision. Various vitamins and minerals are needed for healthy eyes, especially those in leafy greens like kale, spinach and collard greens. Fatty fish like tuna and salmon also have been shown to help the eyes, according to the National Eye Institute. In addition, healthy eating can help people lose weight. Being overweight or obese increases the risk of diabetes, which contributes to vision problems.

- Say "yes" to a dilated eye exam. Many eye diseases have no early symptoms, so the only way to check for eye disease early is through a comprehensive dilated exam. Getting the eyes dilated is painless and fast. Specialized eye drops are used to dilate the eyes. Dilating the pupil enables the eye doctor to see inside of the eye to check for diabetic retinopathy, glaucoma, age-related macular degeneration, and retinal problems. Dilation will last for a few hours, depending on the patient. Although uncomfortable for a little while (dilated pupils let in more light, causing squinting), it's well worth it to catch diseases early.

- Practice frequent handwashing. Washing hands regularly helps to keep bacteria, dust and dirt out of the eyes should you touch your face. In addition to washing hands, avoid rubbing your eyes.

- Wear UV protection. Arizona Retinal Specialists indicates that exposure to ultraviolet radiation increases risk for age-related macular degeneration and may cause sunburn on the corneas or photokeratitis. UV-protected eyeglasses, sunglasses and contact lenses can help, as will using shade hats or visors.

- Wear eye protection. When participating in sports, using chemicals during science class or operating equipment like a leaf blower, wear the right protection to keep eyes safe.

- Give your eyes a rest. Eye doctors know that people spend a lot of time staring at screens during the day. Providing a rest is necessary. Follow the 20-20-20 rule, which translates to every 20 minutes, look about 20 feet away for 20 seconds.

Protecting eyes is a simple yet often overlooked component of maintaining overall health. Taking measures to keep the eyes safe is both easy and effective.

Family-Friendly
Activities For New Year's Day

People spend so much time planning New Year's Eve revelry that they may not consider that they have another day on the holiday calendar to enjoy after the clock strikes 12. New Year's Day activities may differ significantly from the countdowns and parties of the night before, but that doesn't mean it can't be equally enjoyable. Chances are children are home from school for holiday breaks, meaning New Year's Day activities should probably be family-friendly. Check out these family-friendly ways to spend New Year's Day.

- Catch (or play) a football game. New Year's Day and football go hand in hand, and families can likely find a game on television to enjoy together. Of course, it's also fun to burn off a few New Year's Eve calories by playing a game of football in the backyard on January 1.
- Host a New Year's Day meal. Give people plenty of time to recover from last night's antics by inviting neighbors or friends and their children over for a brunch, late lunch or early dinner. Potlucks are great for these occasions because no one will likely want to cook for a crowd.
- Enjoy a movie marathon. Spend the day in comfortable clothes and make a new family tradition. Select one movie for each family member to watch and then cue up the streaming service or dust off that DVD player. Use holiday mugs for hot cocoa and dig into any leftovers from holiday dinners. If a marathon at home isn't up your alley, check out the showings at a nearby theater and enjoy an afternoon at the cinema.

- Take a hike. Enjoy the cold weather up close and personal with a hike in the brisk air. State parks or nearby nature preserves may not be busy on January 1, making them an even more relaxing respite.
- Tackle an organizational project. Get the whole family together and take on a project that has been pushed aside, such as organizing the garage or cleaning out the refrigerator.
- Volunteer with a local charity. Give back to the community and start off the new year on a positive note by volunteering as a family.

New Year's Day presents an ideal opportunity to spend time together as a family.
