Two Ejected From Napavine Meeting as Citizens Vent

CITY COUNCIL: No Action Taken on Two Council Applicants in Attendance

By Jordan Nailon

jnailon@chronline.com

NAPAVINE — The New Year is quickly fading in the rearview, but that doesn't mean the fireworks have stopped in Napavine.

On Tuesday, about 40 people showed up to the regularly scheduled Napavine City Council meeting. Many of them took the opportunity to voice a laundry list of grievances with the city government.

The myriad complaints covered, among other things, the city community development director; a contentious water source known as Well No. 6; a perceived lack of transparency and genuine dialogue between the council and constituents; and an ongoing fact check titfor-tat that has included impassioned letter to the editor campaigns in The Chronicle.

In the face of so much pointed criticism and loud displeasure from the public, Mayor John Sayers elected to eject one audience member in

REGIONAL GENERAL

PERMIT: Main Concerns Focus on Fish Populations, Negative Effects on Chehalis Watershed

By Justyna Tomtas

jtomtas@chronline.com

A regional general permit renewal for the Port of Chehalis has been prolonged due to an extended comment period as concerns from the Quinault Indian Nation and the Environmental Protection Agency are addressed.

The five-year permit, which expired in September 2016, allows the port to fill wetlands while utilizing its Pleasant Valley Mitigation Site, which has 40 acres of credit to offset development in wetlands elsewhere.

The public comment period was extended on Nov. 8, 2016, after the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the permit's issuing agency, received a request from the Quinault Indian Tribe for an extension.

The extended comment period has since closed and the CONCONULLY — If you are prone to wonder what kind of person is in charge of a podunk town in the middle of nowhere Washington that's famous for outhouse races, you'd be wise to guess a Centralian. In fact, the backwoods outdoors mecca known as Conconully seems to be a gathering place for Lewis County and South Thurston County folks who are looking to have a good-time getaway.

It's just that some stay longer than others.

Sam Martin, a native of Centralia, has been mayor of Conconully since 2010. Prior to his political service in Conconully, he served on the Centralia City Council for two terms beginning in 1986 during the city's transition away from a

Local 612, Chehalis River Basin Land Trust Open New Location in Centralia

By The Chronicle

The Local 612 Union of Operating Engineers and the Chehalis River Basin Land Trust had an official ribbon-cutting ceremony at their new office location in Centralia on Tuesday afternoon.

It marks a move for both organizations from Carpenter Hall on Pearl Street, and representatives from both organizations said the new location serves their needs well.

Union Vice President Greg McClure said they bought the building outright, which should position them well for the future.

"We're proud to anchor Tower (Avenue)," he said.

Like other development businesses and organizations moving to the area, McClure said he feels that economic growth moving both north and south along the Interstate 5 corridor has potential to jumpstart the local econ-

The union has been operating in the area since the 1930s, and McClure said he's looking forward to providing potential engineers resources to get into the job market.

Jan Robinson is the board president for the Chehalis River Basin Land Trust, which rents space in the building.

She said the Trust protects some 4,000 acres of land, and their organization complements the union.

We need green places, we need houses, we need businesses," she said.

Robinson also said she hopes the new location will increase their visibility.

The building is located at 620 S. Tower Ave.

Team Tasked With Tackling Defunding of Senior Centers Chooses Leaders

MOVEMENT: Transition Team Looking for Ways to Absorb Commissioners' Plans to Cut $376,000 Contribution Later This Year

By Aaron Kunkler

akunkler@chronline.com

The first meeting of a team organized to transition Lewis County senior programs out from under the county's ownership was held Wednesday and was comprised of representatives from cities, businesses, community organizations and county staff.

The team was organized by the county commissioners following an announcement last December that they plan to cease funding for the senior programs at the end of 2017. At that time, the senior centers would need to foot some $376,000 the county currently contributes toward their operation. The commissioners initially announced plans to cut the funding effective this year, but delayed those plans after residents voiced their displeasure with the timing and nature

"This was a partnership between the seniors and the county all along," Commissioner Gary Stamper said at the beginning of the meeting.

While the commissioners addressed the group, they reiterated that the meeting and transition team were under the representatives' control.

The only county-appointed member of the team is Glenda Forga, who was brought on as the facilitator and who has more than 15 years of experience working with the county's senior services programs.

"I have every confidence that, as a group, we're going to find a solution for this chunk of money," Forga said.

Former Mossyrock Mayor Bill Marshall was selected by the group to chair the team, and Jim Henderson was selected as cochair. Michelle Whitten was selected as the secretary.

team will also meet its goal of tus," he said. transitioning the centers.

Lewis County Commissioners Bobby Jackson, left, Edna Fund and Gary Stamper kicked off a meeting Wednesday for the senior center transition team. While they were in attendance, they made it clear they are not running the meetings, and that the team will have autonomy to decide how best to transition the county's senior programs out from under county ownership.

Commissioner Gary Stamper, left, talks with the newly selected senior center transition team Chairman Bill Marshall at the team's first meeting on Wednesday. Marshall is a former mayor and city councillor for Mossyrock.

"I really feel that we're going Marshall said he believes the to end up going to nonprofit sta-

Future meetings will be held on the first and third Wednesdays of each month at 1 p.m. and will rotate throughout the county. The next meeting will be on Feb. 1 and be held in the WSU Extension room in the county courthouse basement. While the meetings are open to the public, Forga said that to stay focused, the team would not allow non-committee members to simply air grievances or give testimony on how they feel about the centers unless it provides a clear suggestion or information for the team moving forward.

"We're not here to bash, we're here to do a job," Forga said.

The county commissioners announced their intent to defund their portion of the senior services programs in the summer of 2017 shortly after the November general election, which A mission statement was also solution to operate and fund the from area seniors in opposition.

In December, under public pressure, the commissioners reversed course and decided to fund the centers through the end of 2017 in full while creating a transition team to develop a path forward for the county's five senior centers.

The county currently operates five centers and rents out space at a church in Pe Ell to provide nutrition program meals.

The Lewis-Mason-Thurston Area Agency on Aging partners with the county to provide meals at the centers through a nutrition program, but all other programs and activities, known as enrichment programs, are funded by the centers themselves and the

However, on Jan. 12, a womwent to Lewis County Superior Court and requested a domesticviolence protection order against According to court documents, Court Commissioner Tracy Mitchell signed the temporary order, which will be in effect pending a hearing on the request scheduled for 9 a.m. Jan. 30.

Chief Criminal Deputy Prosecutor Brad Meagher told The Chronicle the woman then went to the Lewis County Prosecutor's Office, where she wrote a declaration for prosecutors saying that Carreon had violated the terms of his sentence in a number of ways, including by allegedly traveling to Vancouver, Washington, and Portland.

A warrant was issued for his Brian A. Carreon, 19, of Cenarrest the following day, Friday.

Meagher said Tuesday the Prosecutor's Office also has reason to believe Carreon was also using alcohol and marijuana while on EHM.

"We think a lot of stuff's going on here in violation of his EHM order," Meagher said.

Meagher said Carreon told an who had been dating Carreon his office that Friendship Diversion, the company that manages his electronic home monitoring, told him he could go to Vancouver and Portland.

Brandon Carreon, then 17, makes an appearance in Lewis County Superior Court in July of 2015 at the Lewis County Law and Justice Center in Chehalis.

"Our view is he knew what his conditions were and he violated them willfully," Meagher told The Chronicle Wednesday.

Meagher said Carreon's sentence explicitly prohibits that kind of travel, and said the EHM company has no authority to give him that permission.

Carreon was arrested Sunday and made his first appearance on the alleged violation of his Carreon was arrested in 2015, several months after the robbery at a medical marijuana grow in the 1200 block of Marion Street in Centralia.

On Feb. 19, officers responded to the residence after receiving reports that several suspects entered a residence with guns, demanded money and marijuana and fired several shots at the two residents, killing a dog.

Three other suspects have pleaded guilty and were sentenced in the case.

At Carreon's sentencing hearing in October, Meagher said his office reduced the teen's original charge from first-degree robbery to first-degree rendering criminal assistance in part due to his cooperation with the investigation. Carreon's attorney, Shane O'Rourke, told the court his young client got caught up with a bad crowd.

Carreon was apologetic during his sentencing hearing, but victim Dustin Palermo told The Chronicle he felt Carreon got off with too light a punishment.

It wasn't all that long ago that any news from the city of Tenino was likely to bring embarrassment to the citizens.

There's no reason to name names while pointing fingers, but those who live in the South Thurston County remember a period when the Stone City's elected government was the stuff of punchlines.

There was a mayor, once caught in a compromising position in a city vehicle, who used his title for an unsuccessful run as a standup comedian and at one point was accused of stealOur Views ing a sign, among other disconcerting acts.

There were loud clashes of council members during meetings. The city's police department almost ceased to exist, and the overall budget was in a precarious position.

Lately, there seems to have been an era of dramatic improvement in the tone and direction of the city.

The best current example can be found within the Tenino Police Department.

Last year, there was no chief and only one officer. The idea of contracting with the Thurston County Sheriff's Office and giving up the security and independence provided by a police department was looking attractive.

Instead, Mayor Wayne Fournier tabbed Yelm officer Don Moody as the new chief, ending an era without leadership following a messy lawsuit brought by the sloppy termination of his predecessor.

Now, the city is ready to show off a full staff of officers and the first new patrol vehicles purchased by the city in 20 years. timed with the election of The event is set for 11 a.m. Saturday at the Tenino Police Station.

'The rebuilding process we've gone through for the past eight months, we've accomplished a lot and we're really proud of it," said Moody, who stressed that the improvements are the result of the efforts of many.

'We were down to nothing," Fournier told The Chronicle this week. "Our vehicles were barely on the road. We were kind of barely hanging on by a wing and a prayer."

The improvements seem

Fournier in late 2014, but it takes a dedicated team of public servants to bring about such positive change.

Residents of Tenino are deserving of a focused government concerned with serving them rather than squabbling or getting distracted by petty or unimportant issues.

The current mayor, council and staff appear to understand that, and the result has been a string of positive headlines that are quickly making history of the turmoil of the past.

COMMENTARY: I Was Just Thinking

It Looks Like We're Going to Hell in a Hand Basket

I guess we can say "hell" in these modern times without too many people flinching, but I have stronger words I would have liked to use to express my disappointment at seeing the sign on the front door last week that Hall's Pharmacy was closing its doors

Go ahead, call me a cantankerous old fart, but I see it as one more sign that humanity is on the short end of whatever stick is used to measure interaction between two human beings. Sure, we'll all be able to get our prescriptions filled at Rite Aid or Safeway. Frankly, though, I liked it when a young lady might smile when I opened the door and have the right order waiting for me by the time I reached the counter.

I've said it before, and this certainly isn't the last time you'll hear it from me, but for each and every advancement we make in convenience, efficiency or modern living, we lose more than we gain! You don't have to be as old as I am to remember when you could talk to a clerk in a department store, or have a young man wash your windshield while he was filling your gas tank, or have someone taking your measurements before showing you a jacket or a pair of slacks.

OK, so you can still get service, such as that last example, in Chehalis, but I seem to remember when Centralia had three men's stores. Even stores such as Sears or Penny's are considering pulling out of smaller areas around the nation. I guess we're ahead of the rest of the world, 'cause I seem to remember that it was back in the '80s that Penny's already made the move from Centralia.

But let's get back to Warren Hall. When I asked him what his plans were for the future, I don't remember his reply verbatim, but it went something along this line, "I'll land somewhere. Maybe I'll land on my head, but I'm Norwegian so that shouldn't make much difference.'

Hand-held phones with every access to the world haven't brought us closer together; they've raised a wall between us. Say, Mr. Trump, here's a suggestion: Instead of building that wall between the U.S. and Mexico, wouldn't it be less expensive to just give everybody a brand new mobile phone? It'd probably be

I almost thought I was making a joke with that last observation.

On the other hand, I recently had coffee with a lady I hadn't seen for over a half century. We met in the second grade and I had a crush on her for the rest of our schooling. I hadn't told her about it, though, until the night of graduation from high school.

We partied together and had partaken of illegal spirits. Being driven to our respective homes, I got out first, and was walking down our driveway when the thought hit me that it was now or never! I turned and shouted, "I love you, D----!"

The car was moving and she didn't hear me. I enlisted in the Army. She married someone else. Would a cell phone in my hand have changed the rest of my life?

Changing the subject (and maybe that should be the title of these columns) I find I was nearly right on target about something in last week's column. I guessed that the number of seniors who regularly make use of the five centers in Lewis County might be close to 4,300. Since then I've learned that the actual figure is placed at 4,400. Not a bad guess for an amateur.

Proposed Dam Would Only Add to Financial Problems

W. MILTPRIGGEE. COM

J. Vander Stoep serves on the Governor's Chehalis Basin Work Group and said he believes the $60 million request for the flood retention dam is enough. He said it marks a $10 million increase over last year, with the $10 million coming from the federal government requiring congressional proval, according to a recent article in The Chronicle.

According to the U.S. National Debt Clock we are approaching a $20 trillion debt. Washington state is about $70 billion in debt and Lewis County has been living on reserves for over five years with plans on spending $6.7 million more than we take in during the year of 2017.

The Satsop nuclear power plant was 75 percent complete in 1983 before the money ran out and work was abandoned. Bertha's problems will cost Washington state an estimated $223 million in cost overruns, and further delay the Highway 99 opening — until early 2019.

Will the next headline be "Flood Control Dam above Pe Ell Breaks the Bank?" We have studied flooding issues in Lewis County since 1936. We now have an eight-person Governor's Work Group to identify, explore and implement strategies to combat flooding and restore aquatic species in Lewis, Thurston and Grays Harbor counties.

The studies have been centered around the 2007 flood event. This was a 500-year event. Twenty inches of water fell out of the sky, at least two debris dams broke, almost at the same time, and sent an 18-foot wall of water down the Chehalis river.

Over 2,000 homes and businesses went under water within minutes. The personal property and livestock loss was devastating. Many homes were flooded by as much as 12 feet without a doubt, the definition of a perfect storm.

Letters

If this $600 million-plus dam above Pe Ell gets funding, the water table will be reduced by only 3 feet at Mellen Street in Centralia, given the same conditions of the '07 flood. Also to note, this will not be a power generation dam. The Lewis County Public Utility District has not attended a meeting since 2014 after its evaluation.

Keep in mind the Chehalis and the Quinault tribes will continue to stand in opposition and litigation will go on for years.

I hold little hope that the Pe Ell Lake will be the next recreation center for Lewis County. I view this as a liability rather than an asset. As we fall for this politically charged Hail Mary, Lewis County will still be under water in the next flood event.

Perhaps we can take some satisfaction that your house will only have 5 feet of water as opposed to 8 feet. Interstate 5 will only be closed for three days as opposed to four, and the study groups and attorneys will continue to prosper as we pay for the annual maintenance of this boondoggle dam.

It is time to get smart. As I pointed out earlier, our country, our state and our county have some severe financial problems. Our next generation can not afford yet one more dose of ignorance from this generation. This dam is not the answer.

Levy Passage Will Assist Our Struggling Students

I am writing to express my endorsement of the new White Pass School District levy to support our students who struggle to complete school.

We know that a lot of the challengyouth face today are not of their making, such as unstable housing, loss of a parent due to addiction, incarceration or divorce, mental health and substance use issues of their parents, low family income, and physical, sexual or psychological abuse from caregivers, to name a few.

These conditions, referred to in research as "adverse childhood experiences (ACES)," have lifelong impacts on children and youth as they grow up. The combined research of Drs. Rob Anda and Vincent Felitti has indicated the more different ACEs a young person experiences, the more likely the individual will have mental health, addiction and chronic health issues as adults.

These issues also impact the wellbeing of the community — individuals with higher ACEs are less likely to get and keep a job. Eastern Lewis County, unfortunately, is not protected from our young people experiencing ACEs.

Recent data released from state Department of Social and Health Services risk profile indicates that communities within the White Pass School District have higher rates than the rest of Lewis County and the state in child abuse and neglect referrals and higher than state rates for youth drug and alcohol treatment.

The distance between Chehalis/ Centralia and our communities also presents challenges — service providers have to pay their employees mileage and travel time to come to our communities, and that travel time cuts into the amount of time a person actually receives assistance.

Passage of this levy will provide funding to support an "in-house' mental health-social services navigator, who can work with students and their families to reduce the risk of ACEs in our community.

Please join me in supporting our community and vote yes on the replacement levy for the White Pass School District middle of the meeting for speaking coarsely and out of turn. It was only the second time in his term as mayor that Sayers has thrown a citizen out of a public meeting. It also happens to be the second meeting in a row where the mayor has been compelled to eject an objecting member of the public.

That action did little to quell the frustration among the assembled crowd, though. Out of turn interjections from the crowd continued throughout the rest of the meeting. In fact, the biggest kerfuffle was reserved for the immediate conclusion of the meeting when Napavine resident Merry Barnes stormed the podium and directed an impassioned opposition rant on a number of issues to the council. The finger-pointing tirade ended when Barnes was escorted out of City Hall under the direction of Napavine Police Chief Chris Salyers.

'They are just playing their game. You've got to just let them have their say," said Mayor Sayers on Wednesday after he had decompressed from the high tension public meeting. "Some of these people just have diarrhea of the mouth."

The highly anticipated meeting began with two applicants for two vacant city council positions partaking in public interviews by the council. The prospective council members, Shawn O'Neill and Sandy Wiediger, were each asked the same four questions before the city council conducted an executive session. In the end, Sayers announced that a decision would not be made on either applicant that night. The mayor said it was the council's preference to wait until February's city council it to Tuesday's meeting. That applicant is former Napavine coun- of applicants cilman Larry Stafford.

We're not in a rush, but here's the other thing that's going on if you appointed one person tonight, how would that look to an angry crowd?" said Sayers. "A lot of people think it was a good idea to wait. But you'll always have somebody who doesn't understand the process."

O'Neill said he was disappointed that the council chose not to make a decision on his application on Tuesday, but he added that he is willing to wait out the process.

"I have a passion for public services, especially local government," said O'Neill, who recently graduated from The Evergreen State College with a bachelor's degree in public administration. "Transparency, equity and approachability are the three things that I would like to bring to this council."

O'Neill has also been involved with Napavine Youth Baseball for nine years and served as the league president for the past seven years.

We have run into roadblock after roadblock in getting anything done," said O'Neill in regard to the youth baseball league and sports complex. "That's kind of the thing at the center of my heart is creating a safe place for kids to play and having the city be a part of that."

Wiediger, who has an associate's degree, stated to the council that, "My vision is to see the city grow and hopefully the city council will listen to citizens and take into account how they feel."

Sayers noted that there is "good possibility" that additional letters of interest for the city council positions will be received prior to February's city meeting in order to hear from a council meeting. He is excited by third applicant who did not make the prospect of soon having a full council selected from a surplus

You've got to remember that I've got vacancies for the planning commission too," said Sayers, who hopes that any applicant not chosen for the council will choose to join the planning commission. "I need people there too, and right now they don't have enough for a quorum."

The commission fell below quorum on Dec. 29 when Bob Wheeler was appointed to the city council in order to bring that group up to quorum requirements following the twin resignations of Laverne Haslett and Armondo Galaviz the previous week.

During the public comment session of the public meeting, former councilman Scott Hamilton voiced his dissatisfaction with the direction of the city government and announced his in- leased us," said Hamilton. tention to run for Bob Wheeler's seat on the council during this year's election. "Your city council will soon be made up of appointees, and we'll be out here watching to see if you're really in it because you are for the mayor and what he wants or if you are really working to serve the citizens of Napavine," said Hamilton.

Speaking directly to Wheeler, Hamilton added, "Integrity is everything. I heard you complaining for months on why exactly the mayor is not fit to be mayor and yet you accepted his offer to the appointment of the council."

Shifting back to the council's consent agenda, a vote was taken by the council in regard to Well No. 6. The first vote approved the application of ozone at the well as part of a filtration process and a second vote approved a feasibility study that had been conducted on the well. Both votes were unanimous.

Those votes also elicited pangs of disapproval from the Earlier in the meeting, numerous speakers had made pleas with the council to stop pursuing the water source due to perceived quality issues. Those speakers included Larry Hamilton, Mike Hamilton and Jerry Graham, all who have business interests that would be serviced by Well No. 6 if it were to become fully operational. In one instance, the water emanating from the well was referred to as salty.

Mike Hamilton believes the quality of the water is so poor that it would lead to the shutdown of numerous businesses in the area, particularly restaurants.

You annexed us. We never wanted to be a part of the city of Napavine, and we still don't want to be a part of Napavine. In fact, it would be a lot better if you re-

"The city of Napavine has pretty much killed all of our plans except to sell and get out. I'd rather do anything else. I'd rather move to Lake Havasu and retire," said Graham, generating a round of applause from the crowd with his thinly veiled reference to Napavine's community development director, Steve Ashley, who lives in Arizona.

Recently resigned councilwoman Laverne Haslett made claims that the bid process for the well work that was approved on Tuesday never went through proper bidding process and was therefore illegal. It is a charge that Sayers dismissed.

"She said that she thinks the city did things illegally by the way they put out the bid," said Sayers, who noted there was only one bid submitted between last Thursday, when the call for bids was posted, and Tuesday's meeting.

Sayers said he was confident in the process, although he was not sure who the bid had actually been awarded to. "I don't get too involved in that. I pretty much figure that they know what they are doing,' said Sayers in regard to his community development staff.

As for the claims of salty or otherwise undesirable water at Well No. 6, Sayers was again on the defensive. "I don't know where they got that from," said Sayers. "That is coming from Mike Hamilton. Mike Hamilton is getting all that stirred up. He doesn't think that the water is clear enough to be using. He's down to his last leg on an appeal and he's trying to come back at the city any way he can."

Sayers added, "It's been tested to be safe to drink. The only thing about it is the color and we have a way to deal with that by filtering it." Going forward, Sayers expressed reserved optimism that Napavine will be able to navigate out of the political wilderness that it has been wandering recently. 'We've just got to be patient and I think things will get better. We're going to start searching for a community development director and see how that goes. It's looking like it might not be Cris Dodd because she's doesn't seem too interested. She seems to want to stay right where she's at and what she's doing," said Sayers.

That's the reason I've been holding off for the last year or so is I've been trying to give her a chance." Sayers said previously this will be Ashley's final year working for the city as community development director. He was asked to

Port

Army Corps will address the issues that arose, while balancing them with the potential for economic growth.

The tribe submitted a detailed list of concerns it has in regard to the permit.

commissioners pressed frustration that the permit had not yet been renewed, in part because it could hinder projects currently taking place at the port that would provide jobs to the local community.

The projects, dubbed "Project Desert" and "Project Sighthound," would bring hundreds ert would initially offer 200 jobs, and grow to 300 within five years, while Project Sighthound would initially bring in 300 jobs, and increase to 700 jobs at full buildout.

"From the port's perspective when we received those comments, it was a little disappointing," Randy Mueller, executive director of the port, said at a meeting last week.

The port has addressed all of the concerns in a technical document submitted to the Corps of Engineers. Mueller said some of the concerns presented by the Quinault Indian Nation were misconceptions. Mueller told port commissioners he extended an invitation to the tribe for a tour of the area to address and clear up some of those misconceptions, but he had not received a response as of Jan. 12.

Fawn Sharp, president of the Quinault Indian Nation, said in a letter to Kiley Zaubi, the project manager for the Army Corps of Engineers, that as the only federally-recognized Indian tribe with treaty-reserved rights in the Chehalis Basin, the tribe has "significant concerns" regarding the project.

"The RGP is limited to actions that have a minimal effect or a minimal cumulative effect, but there are no standards of what effects are considered minimal, nor any standards on cumulative effects," Sharp said. "With the current degraded condition of the Chehalis Watershed, we question whether even minimal detrimental effects should be permitted under Regional General Permits." In the technical document compiled by Ecological Land Services Inc. on behalf of the port, the report states a cumulative impact assessment prepared present and potential future cu- the Environmental Protection

Among the tribes concerns were the proposed wetland fill location, and the degradation of fish habitat, specifically for

Sharp also said the tribe does not think the proposal meets the requirements under the regional general permit because the proposals for 40 acres exceeds the acreage limit. The initial permit, according to Sharp, was for 28 acres, but the renewal exceeds that amount.

'This change reflects a 60 percent increase in the amount of wetland proposed for filling, and in addition to exceeding the tions of this magnitude should not be considered a renewal of an existing permit," Sharp stated in the letter. "Regional General Permit 9 requires classifying resource losses that are specifically identifiable or reasonably likely to occur, but the proposal is not evaluating the likely impact of the increased impervious surface dustrial development." matic environmental impact statement, which presented four options to reduce flooding in the Chehalis Basin. Sharp said the proposal needed to be examined to make sure no fill is proposed in the 100-year floodplains of the Berwick and Dillenbaugh creeks and the Newaukum River.

Sharp also said the tribe is concerned about detrimental effects to area creeks.

"The mitigation is narrowly focused on wetland function and completely ignores any potential restoration actions for the creek," Sharp said in regard to Stearns Creek, which was channelized. "We are concerned that by putting this area into a mitigation site the wetland mitigation will not improve the fish habitat, and may even preclude any future restoration actions in these creeks. ... We cannot support locking in the currently degraded condition by restoring the wetland only."

recognize the need to complete 'major restoration actions" on the Chehalis River and said maintaining the existing conditions will not accomplish the needed improvement or support the protection of the tribe's treaty right. The Quinault Indian Nation for the permit examined the past, also echoed concerns raised by ects within the permit's bound-

Agency in a comment letter dated Nov. 8, 2016.

R. David Allnutt, director of the office of Environmental Review and Assessment, said in the letter that actions under the permit could lead to increased

The proposed loss of 40 acres of wetlands would result not only in a loss of flood storage to the basin, but would also likely result in increased runoff to the affected creeks, resulting in greater synchronicity of the increased flood discharges to the river," Allnutt said in the letter. "This would exacerbate flooding locally as well as in areas downstream of the proposed project, which would contribute to water quality degradation and 25-acre limit in RGP 9. Modifica- negatively impact fish and other plauded by agencies who have aquatic resources of importance in the Chehalis basin."

Allnutt added the EPA does not believe the impacts would be minimal, and stated a RGP for the proposed discharge is not the appropriate instrument for the port's project.

IN THE PORT'S response, the likely to occur as part of the in- report stated the entity "has no intent to impact the Quinault Another concern Sharp men- Indian Nation's exercise of fedtioned stems from the program- erally guaranteed fishing rights," and "seeks to avoid impacting fish or fish habitat," which would be accomplished by locating the potential projects outside of the 100-year floodplain.

It would also meet or exceed current stormwater standards and conservation recommendations, engage the Endangered Species Act and Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act Consultation. The Pleasant Valley Mitigation Site includes fish habitat enhancement measures that were previously recommended by the Cowlitz Indian Tribe, the report "The Quinault Indian Nation dressed the Quinault's concerns that the proposal does not meet the requirements under the RGP by stating the same projects could be permitted individually. The RGP was sought out because the port wanted to ensure proj-ary were "reviewed as a whole rather than fragmenting the permitting on a project-specific basis," as was done in the past.

The port further said its goal was always to have up to 40 acres of wetland fill, and the 25-acre cap in the original RGP was because the mitigation site was in "That question has now been resoundingly answered in the crucible of time, efforts and expense of the Port through the gain of 66 acres high functioning wetlands and aquatic/floodplain resources, including 1,200 acrefeet of Chehalis Basin flood reduction over 6 years, fish habitat and water quality treatment."

The Pleasant Valley Mitigation Site's success has been apreviewed it, stated the document.

The port also stated the mitigation site does not increase flooding, but instead reduces the volume and slows the velocity of floodwaters, while filtering pollutants and improving water quality which in turn benefits fish, their habitat and other issues.

OTHER COMMENTS received by the Corps of Engineers included those from a family on Sanderdian Tribe.

The concerns the family expressed were about flooding along Jackson Highway and their property, declining fish runs in Dillenbaugh Creek, and included a request that an inspection be conducted of areas before wetlands are filled in.

Since the property is situated the port said that greatly mini- date afterward.

mizes any flooding impact the property would experience from future work within the permit's boundaries. It also stated the declining fish runs in the creek were likely not caused by port actions, but instead were part of a statewide trend. The technical document said wetlands within the permit's boundary are assessed by agency staff before it is filled, as is the case for wetland permitting in the state of Wash-

As for the Nisqually Indian Tribe, it requested a cultural resources survey be conducted by a qualified archeologist, which the port said the RGP already requires. They also asked that an inadvertent discovery plan be implemented, and that the tribe is informed if there are discoveries of cultural resources or human burials. The port responded and said if any human burials, cultural resources or historic properties are found, a stop work order would be issued immediately. It also said the tribe would be informed of any discoveries, as would the Corps of Engineers and the Department of Archaeology and Historic Preservation. Zaubi, the project manager son Road and the Nisqually In- with the Army Corps, said the entity had a government to government meeting with the Quinault Indian Tribe to further address the issues they brought forth. She said the Corps is obligated to thoroughly address their concerns.

The port is not able to attend the government to government meeting, but was assured upstream of the RGP boundary, it would be provided with an up-

Correction: In the Saturday, Jan. 14, edition of The Chronicle, in an article titled "Centralia School District to Host Hispanic Family Forum on Bond Measure," the purpose of the meeting was incorrectly reported. Although there will be a brief presentation by Superintendent Mark Davalos on the school district's $74 million bond measure, the forum is primarily focused on giving Hispanic families a line of communication about how they are being served by the Centralia School District.

Women's March on Olympia Expected to Draw Thousands to Capitol Fountain

By Amelia Dickson

The Olympian

As hundreds of thousands of women across the United States gather Saturday to march for equality, Olympia won't be left out.

An estimated 2,500 women are expected to gather at the Capitol's Tivoli Fountain at 10 a.m. and to the Olympia Farmers Market. There, they'll turn around and march back to the Capitol for a rally.

"It's gone way beyond what I dreamed," said organizer Caitlin Gallup. "But in a good way."

Treasury Pick Facing Foreclosure Criticism

By Martin Crutsinger

AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON — Donald Trump's pick to lead the Treasury Department, Stephen Mnuchin, built his reputation and his fortune as a savvy Wall Street investor. But one of those investments has put him in the crosshairs of Democrats as he heads into his confirmation hearing Thursday: sub-prime mortgage lender IndyMac bank.

Mnuchin, who served as Trump's finance chairman during the campaign, has defended his role in the purchase of the failed bank, whose collapse in 2008 was the second biggest bank failure of the financial crisis. Mnuchin, who assembled a group to buy the bank from the government, renamed it OneWest and turned it around, selling it for a handsome profit to CIT Group Inc. in 2014.

But critics have cited the bank's foreclosure policies under Mnuchin as a prime example of the kind of Wall Street greed that Trump, the candidate, campaigned against. They planned to question Mnuchin about the foreclosures during his confirmation hearing before the Senate Finance Committee.

Mnuchin has called the criticism unjustified, saying in a CNBC interview right after Trump nominated him in November that buying IndyMac

Collapse of Burning Tehran High-Rise Kills 30 Firefighters

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — A high-rise building in Tehran engulfed by fire collapsed on Thursday, killing at least 30 firefighters and injuring some 75 people, state media reported.

The disaster struck the Plasco building, an iconic structure in central Tehran just north of the Iranian capital's sprawling bazaar. Firefighters, soldiers and other emergency responders dug through the rubble, looking for survivors.

Iranian authorities did not immediately release definitive casualty figures, which is common in unfolding disasters.

Iran's state-run Press TV announced the firefighters' deaths, without giving a source for the information. Local Iranian state television said 30 civilians were injured in the disaster, while the state-run IRNA news agency said 45 firefighters had been injured.

Heavy Vehicles Try to Reach Buried Hotel Where 30 Missing

PENNE, Italy (AP) — Rescue workers on skis reached a four-star spa hotel buried by an avalanche in earthquake-stricken central Italy Thursday, reporting no sign of life in the building even though two survivors found outside said more than 30 people had been in it when the snow struck.

As heavy vehicles tried to reach the Hotel Rigopiano to help with the rescue, criticism mounted over the response to the four quakes, one a magnitude 5.7, and days of unusually heavy snowfall that have blanketed the region.

Accounts emerged of hotel guests messaging rescuers and friends for help Wednesday, with at least one attempt at raising the alarm rebuffed for several hours.

Historic German Abbey Closes; Property Goes to Diocese

BERLIN (AP) — Bavarian Catholic church authorities say they have closed Germany's last Bridgettine Order abbey at the request of the Vatican. The property, including a precious library, now goes to the local diocese.

Top Bridgettine scholars have worried that the 500-book library at Altomuenster Abbey could be split up or damaged. They collected nearly 2,000 signatures urging the Munich-Freising diocese to preserve it for research.

Munich Vicar General Msgr. Peter Beer sought to allay those fears, saying Thursday all books dating from before 1803 would be digitized and made publicly available.

He says the abbey itself will remain "a spiritual place" but specific plans haven't been made.

anyone seemed to take exception.

Martin fondly remembers pontoon boat parked on Main the time the Goebel Septic team veered off course during the Washington State Patrol trooper, bucket races and smashed into a parked car, much to the thrill of the crowd.

That car was parked right on "I got in trouble from them for the side of the road and we tried to find the owner to have them move it but they never showed up, so of course it got run into," said Martin. "When you've got those buckets on all you can By my count, the former law- hear is the rattle. You can't hear way off course.'

Merrily imbibing inside the double-barrel woodstove heated confines of his brother's shop, George Martin noted that most of the friendly faces milling about were visitors from The Chronicle coverage area. He says that fact is no accident since he's been trying to get the word out about Conconully's charm for years.

"Every year we have people from all over," said Martin. "They kind of come in and out. Once you come here you realize it's fun and you keep on coming back."

ONE NEW set of Conconully visitors this year was Kim Mc-Carthy and his wife, Maggie, who live in Centralia. Standing around an open fire in the dead of night, Kim McCarthy noted, 'They've been working us for a couple of years and we thought, Well, we don't have anything else going on. Let's go check it out."

To hear him tell it, that spur of the moment decision wound up being a winner, despite the bone chilling cold.

"If you can get this many people out here when it's 15 degrees you're doing something right," said McCarthy. "We're just here for a break from reality.

Plenty of Western Washingtonians, or "coasties" as the Okanogan County locals insist on saying, find or make the time to visit Conconully throughout the year, and the city goes to plenty of effort to keep enticing the visitors back.

Tucked in the snow-capped foothills of the Cascade Mountains and seemingly within shouting distance of Canada, Conconully is all but surrounded by wide open timberlands and state forest or parks. In fact, The Conconully State Park sits at the south edge of town and the Conconully National Wildlife Refuge buffers the entire eastern flank

of the recreating hotspot. A pair of manmade lakes, used for crop irrigation on the sprawling agricultural land downhill, bookend Conconully, and the lakes are prime waters for fishing, including the ice capped variety. The Conconully Chamber of Commerce even holds a trout derby each year in April. This year it will be on April 22-23. For those who prefer snow racing though, later this month the Chamber will host the Snow Dog Super Mush dog sled races.

With prime hunting grounds and endless miles of liberally regulated ATV and ORV trails surrounding the town it is no surprise that out of doors enthusiasts flock to the middle of nowhere, Washington, for their hideaway getaways. That fact is not lost on the Conconully locals, and they seem determined to keep their visitors happy and coming back for more.

For instance, the weather doesn't always cooperate with the timing of outhouse weekend, but the powers that be have never let an absence of snow derail the event.

"There's been years where they've had to truck in snow. They've trucked in snow from probably 30 miles away," explained George Martin. He could recall at least three times that snow has been imported, with the most recent effort happening about three years ago.

"This was a good year. Good snow and a fast course," noted Martin, who said the coldest he remembers the outhouse races getting is 4 degrees. He added, There's been times out here when it's so freezing and icy that everyone out here walking has to really watch their step."

To be honest though, that kind of vigilance is wise for any visitor to Conconully, whether they are traipsing around the outhouse race course or tromping through the backwoods on a big game hunt. Because when you're up in Conconully Sasquatch country, you've got to watch where you're stepping.

'We Were Down to Nothing:' Tenino Police Ready to Show Off Improvements and Honor the Past

SEEKING SUCCESS: Tenino

Police Department Offers Citizens Chance to Meet Officers, See New Vehicles

By Natalie Johnson

njohnson@chronline.com

At this time last year, the Tenino Police Department was on the brink of collapse with only one officer and no police

"We were down to nothing," said Tenino Mayor Wayne Fournier. "Our vehicles were barely on the road. We were kind of barely hanging on by a wing and a prayer."

What a difference a year makes.

The Tenino Police Department is starting 2017 on much stronger footing, with a full roster of officers and its first new vehicles in 20 years.

"The rebuilding process we've gone through for the past eight months, we've accomplished a lot and we're really proud of it," said Chief Don Moody, who took the helm at the department in May after previously working for the city of Yelm.

On Saturday, the police department plans to celebrate what Fournier called a "new beginning" with a meet and greet starting at 11 a.m. to show off its two new officers and three brand new Ford Interceptor SUVs.

The celebration comes only a few days after the 39th anniversary of the line-of-duty death of Tenino police officer John Dowies, who died Jan. 18, 1978. While the timing was accidental, bought used vehicles from the Fournier said he appreciates the coincidence.

"My grandpa was chief then," he said. "It's kind of really special for us to plant the flag on Saturday and say the police department is not going anywhere."

The city had previously Washington State Patrol in the past, but recently bought three brand-new vehicles.

Moody said the city researched the issue and found it spent up to $110,000 in the past five to seven years on repairs and parts for its used vehicles.

"They're money pits because end up throwing money at them,"

The new vehicles will also

He said he had to clear away old computers and vehicle parts from the station, along with other detritus from the past two decades. The department has also updated its policies and procedures

"It's just a very exciting time for the whole city," Moody said.

In the next year, Moody said he's looking forward to continuing to implement the changes to the department, training its new officers and exploring the department's role in emergency management and area schools.

Bearcats Claw Past Thunderbirds 64-57

By The Chronicle

Tumwater shot 53 percent from the field, but it wasn't enough to keep up with W.F. West.

The Bearcats earned a 64-47 win over the Thunderbirds in Evergreen 2A Conference basketball in Chehalis on Tuesday, improving to 3-0 on league action.

Julia Johnson, Lexie Strasser and Shasta Lofgren each scored a team-high 12 points. Erika Brumfield added 9 points and 13 rebounds.

"It wasn't that easy. We couldn't shake them," W.F. West coach Tom Kelly said. "We've got to be smarter, be aware of their players. (Sierra) Snyder and (Brooke) Hare, they are really good players. Those are the two you've got to shut down."

Tumwater's Sierra Snyder scored a game-high 16 points and teammate Brooke Hare added 13. W.F. West's defense made the big difference, as the Bearcats recorded 10 steals, led by Kiara Steen and Lofgren with four a

"We got a lot of things to work on. ... We're just not playing well right now," Kelly said. "They're playing hard and on defense, that's how we're winning right now. We really have to shore some things up but I'm happy with the win."

After a delay due to the gym lights not turning on, the tipoff came to Johnson, who dribbled down the court for an easy layup. It was 8-7 late in the first quarter before W.F. West managed to separate itself, going on a run to take a 17-8 lead after a quarter.

"The guys really came out tonight and put a lot of pressure on them early," Centralia coach Kyle Donahue said. "We got a lot of easy looks in our offense, and it really opened things up for us later in the game."

Cale Shute added 10 points and seven rebounds, and Maninderjit Singh went 3 for 3 from long range to score 9.

The Tigers, as a whole, shot 14 of 24 from behind the arc in the win.

Pirates Power Past Winlock

C2BL: Adna, Kalama, Toledo, Napavine, Rainier All Secure League Wins

By The Chronicle

ADNA — Thanks to a treasure chest full of free throw attempts the Pirates were able to fend off a pesky Winlock squad by a score of 75-62 here Wednesday night in boys Central 2B basketball action.

"They played us very tough. Tons of credit to those kids and to coach (Nick) Bamer. They battled," said Adna coach Luke Salme. "We didn't defend as well as we need to be defending right now at this point in the season."

The Pirates (25 of 55) and Cardinals (23 of 54) shot nearly identical marks from the floor but Adna mustered a mighty 28 attempts from the charity stripe in order to create space in the final score. For the game the Pirates managed to shoot 16 of 18 from the line while Winlock made just 8 of 18 freebies.

"We did a pretty good job, especially in the second half, kind of attacking the rim," said Salme. 'We didn't shoot it as well as we would have liked but when you get that many attempts I guess it did work out in our favor.'

The Pirates had five players score in double figures with Tanner Rigdon scoring a team-high

Etherly, Smith Lead Centralia in 57-46 Win Over Tacoma

By Aaron VanTuyl

avantuvl@chronline.com

It's early in the Lady Blazers' league campaign, but not too early to call Wednesday's win a big one.

Centralia kept the NWAC West Region's leading scorer in check and closed the door on Tacoma late for a 57-46 win at Michael Smith Gymnasium, picking up a victory in a matchup of the last two unbeaten teams on the conference.

"It's huge," first-year Blazer coach Caleb Sells said. "They're a veteran group, and Christy's (Martin) an outstanding coach. And this one, on our home court, you can't put a price on how valuable this one is for us."

W.F. West Product Payton Kelly Carves Out a Niche With Titans

Tacoma guard Payton Kelly prepares to shoot a 3-pointer against Centralia on Wednesday night at Michael Smith Gymnasium. The W.F. West product has become a key contributor for the Titans.

INTANGIBLES: Former Bearcat Guard Now a Key Contributor for 13-3 Tacoma

By Aaron VanTuyl

avantuyl@chronline.com

Payton Kelly's stats don't jump off the page.

That, however, is nothing new for Tacoma's sophomore

Kelly, a 2015 W.F. West High School graduate, was in the starting lineup when the Titans took on Centralia Wednesday in an NWAC West Region showdown. She finished with 6 points, six rebounds and an assist, playing 34 minutes and bookending the Titans' 3-point shooting with a triple in the first quarter and another in the last minute.

In between, she was everywhere the stat sheet doesn't cover.

"She's someone who does all the intangibles," Tacoma coach Christy Martin said. "She's somebody who can come in and set the tempo for the game. If we're moving too fast or not moving fast enough, she's got a high IQ, so she's able to see what needs to be done and she does it."

The 5-foot-7 guard has carved out a niche with Tacoma, which currently sits at 13-3 on the season and was ranked 8th in last week's NWAC coaches

Kelly

But, again, carving out a niche is nothing new. Back in her crimson and grey days Kelly was a part of three Bearcat teams to play for a state championship, and had a key role as a reserve guard on W.F. West's 2014 title team.

During a career in which she played with a smorgasbord of future NCAA Division I athletes, though, she wasn't exactly a top college recruit.

"I had to focus on the little things I could control," she said. "I made sure I was a good teammate and could pass the ball. I got really good at the little things.

She came by it naturally; her grandfather, Tom Kelly, coached at rival Centralia when Payton was in high school and is now the Bearcats' head coach. Her dad, Shon, has been coaching summer ball for years. So when she wrapped up her prep career as a starter on the Bearcats' third-straight state finals team, she wanted to keep going.

"After the teams we had, it was a lot of fun and I've been playing forever," she said. "So to go on and continue for however many years I can, that's kind of the goal."

Her cousin, Keylen Steen, was playing catcher for Tacoma's baseball team, and told her to check out the Titans' women's team, which Martin was in the process of turning around. She took her cousin's advice and watched Tacoma take on the Lady Blazers in Centralia.

"I like the way (Martin) coached," she said. "So I approached her, and talked to her, and ended up here."

And now — not unlike her high school days — she's got an understated, but important, role on a winning team.

"I'm not the main person, and I don't always play a lot in the games, but I'm a good leader when I'm on the court, I feel like," she said. "I go in and do the things I can control, and what I can help the team control.

She's averaging a modest 4.6 points, 2.7 rebounds, 1.3 assists and just over a steal a game, though the number have never been her prerogative.

"She's been an amazing player for TCC," Martin said. "She's a huge reason that we've been successful."

found a window, clapped for the ball, received an on-point pass from Steph Curry, turned, fired and splashed in a 3. The whistle blew moments later. He had return words for Westbrook.

It was the signature sequence of the Warriors' 121-100 win over the Thunder on Wednesday night, perfectly summing up the state of the two franchises and their feuding former teammates.

Westbrook's jam was spectacular, a 1-on-3 power-of-will move with a massive degree of difficulty, a determined, lonesome star forcing his way through an alleyes-on-him defense. Durant's 3 was open and easy, a practice shot for the 7-foot sniper. The pass came from Curry, his costar. The extra space came from the presence of Klay Thompson, another of his co-stars.

Three points is more than two. Four All-Stars is more than one. Try all he might _ and Westbrook will always go down swinging, from now until retirement, especially against Durant _ there's nothing he can do about the imbalance between the two rosters.

The Thunder has a Kevin Durant sized hole at the small forward position. The issue in this matchup for OKC: No one in the league is better at taking advantage of that than Durant.

though, went on an 11-3 run with Smith scoring the last 7 points — that pushed the lead to 43-32.

Tacoma pulled back within 5 twice in the final 5 minutes, but each time Smith was able to score inside to provide breathing room.

'A smarter coach would have started getting her the ball a little more, sooner in the game," Sells joked. "We've got some big kids on our team, and their kids started looking tired, and I thought Kylie had an opportunity — and she started taking it to 'em."

Malik picked up a technical foul after voicing her opinion on the lack of a call inside with 2:05 left to play, and Etherly hit the foul shots to push the lead to 9 points and all but ice the game.

Tacoma's Bobbi Westendorf came into the game averaging 20.9 points a game, fourth in the NWACs and the best mark in the West Region. The Blazers, however, held the 5-foot-10 sophomore guard/forward to a 3-of-16 shooting performance and 9 points.

"That Westendorf kid is one of the best players in the NWAC, and our kids, they harassed her all night long," Sells said. "(Tianno) Hanohano, Kylie, any kid that had to guard her did a fantastic job tonight."

Centralia held a 56-46 rebounding advantage, with Smith grabbing 12 boards. Brianna Zaragoza-Jones added nine boards, and seven players finished with at least three.

MATT BAIDE / mbaide@chronline.com

Centralia's Tianna Hanohano (24) slaps the ball away from Tacoma's Bobbi Westendorf during an NWAC West Division women's basketball game on Wednesday in Centralia.

"That's a great team effort on the boards," Sells said. "We've been waiting for that for a long time, and it was nice to see that come together tonight."

It was the fourth straight win for Centralia, which started the season 6-7 but now sits at 10-7.

"We're getting to that point in the season where the freshmen ... It's starting to become simpler for them," Sells said, of a team that features just one sophomore. "They're starting to recognize more things in the games.

The Titans were averaging 72 points a game prior to Wednesday's game, but managed just 17 in the first half and shot 27 percent (16 of 59) in the loss.

The Blazers, meanwhile, shot

30 percent (23 of 76), but hit their first 3-point attempt — a bucket from Rylee White to open the scoring — and missed the next 23 to go 1 of 24.

"During this last four-game win streak we've really shored up our man-to-man defense," Sells said, "and that's really what allows you, on nights like these, to pull out an ugly win."

Centralia hosts South Puget Sound at 5 p.m. Saturday in another West Region matchup.

Note: Tacoma, coming off a 67-62 win over Lower Columbia on Saturday, was without Aubre Mitchell (13.2 points, 6.5 rebounds a game) and Kiki Gilbert (9.7 points, 1.9 steals) for Wednesday's contest.

The Bearcats continued to pad the advantage, with Courtney Bennett coming off the bench and making a pair of 3-pointers to help spark the Bearcats though a run by Tumwater late in the second quarter cut the W.F. West lead to 31-20 at halftime.

After the break, though, W.F. West outscored Tumwater 33-27 to cruise to the win, though Kelly wasn't happy with how his team performed.

"We wanted to keep pushing it, see what kind of shape they were in," Kelly said. "They were in pretty good shape. ... We were in foul trouble, but the h came in and I thought did great for us."

Aberdeen was led by Reagan Glanz with 12 points.

Free throws down the stretch hurt Centralia late, but the Bobpotential game-winner rimmed out.

"They had a 3 opportunity that went in and out," Centralia coach Doug Ashmore said. "It was a lucky day for us. It looked like it was going in. We'll take our first league win on the road."

The game didn't start well for the Tigers, who ended the first quarter in a 15-6 hole. But the Centralia defense stepped up in the second quarter, pitching a shutout while scoring 12 points to take an 18-15 lead at halftime.

"We didn't make adjust-ments. Our girls thought 'We're in a game here," Ashmore said. "That's where we hang our hat because we struggle at times scoring. The girls really stepped

As we continue to stretch like yoga pants into the new year the WDFW has released a list of 2016 returns and 2017 projections for salmon, steelhead and smelt on the the lower Columbia River and its tributaries. Across the board the numbers are down.

On the Cowlitz River 25,100 adult Chinook were predicted to return in 2016 while only 22,478 actually showed up. In 2017 that Cowlitz projection dips to just 17,100 kings. On the Kalama River 4,900 kings were predicted to return in 2016 and yet only 3,980 actually made it back. In 2017 that run is predicted to fall to 3,100 Chinook. Things have been perhaps the most dismal on the Lewis River where 1,100 kings were predicted to show up in 2016 but only a miniscule return of 470 Chinooks actually showed up. In 2017 that run is predicted to reach just 700 fish.

On the Columbia itself the coho return for 2016 was predicted to be 322,600 fish, but they never materialized either. For what it's worth the 2017 return is predicted to be similar with a slight improvement in jacks. The 2016 run for smelt was characterized as "good" with an estimated 5.1 million pounds of fish bioreturn was lower than 2015 and the trend is angling downward. The WDFW predicts a "modest" smelt run in 2017.

The new regulation is intended to align the sport season with the recreational lingcod season in Marine Areas 1, 2 and 3, including Willapa Bay and Grays Harbor. It is also intended to preserve recreational fishing opportunities for the more popular seasons.

According to the WDFW press release, bottomfish species include Pacific cod, Pacific tomcod, Pacific hake (or whiting), walleye pollock, all species of dabs, sole and flounders (except Pacific halibut), lingcod, ratfish, sablefish, cabezon, greenling, buffalo sculpin, great sculpin, red Irish lord, brown Irish lord, Pacific staghorn sculpin, wolfeel, giant wrymouth, plainfin midshipman, all species of shark, skate, rockfish, rattail, and surfperches (all saltwater perch are surfperch) excluding shiner

For hunters looking to exmass making the run. Still, that pand the peripherals of their opportunities the WDFW will be accepting master hunter permit applications through Feb. 15.

According to a press release, the master hunter permit prohunting heritage and conservation ethic." There are currently 1,650 master hunters registered in Washington.

Master hunters are used by animals that cause property damage. Mater hunters are also required to participate in volunteer work to increase access to private lands, habitat enhancement, data collection, hunter education and landowner relations.

> A set of four orientation meetings will be hosted by the WDFW between Feb. 4-15 at locations around the state. The most local meetings are scheduled for:

• Feb. 9 – From 7-9 p.m. at the Tacoma Sportsman's Club, 16409 Canyon Rd E, Puyallup

• Feb. 15 – From 7-9 p.m. at the Cowlitz Co. PUD building, -0.5 feet, Copalis 961 12th Ave, Longview

With that official business out of the way it's time to check back in on the dwindling hunting prospects list.

In Goose Management Area 2 the hunt will stay open through Jan. 22 on Saturdays, Sundays and Wednesdays, except for inside the Ridgefield National Wildlife Refuge where goose hunting is only permitted on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays through Jan. 21. Goose Management Area 3 will remain open through Jan. 29.

Duck, coot and snipe hunts across the state will also continue through Jan. 29. Additionally, brant hunts are ongoing in both Skagit and Pacific counties during January. In Skagit County brant are fair game on Jan. 21, and 22, while the Pacific County brant hunts are scheduled for Jan. 19, 21, and 22.

Following tracks through the snow was easy but even with the west side white stuff all but gone bobcat, fox, raccoon, cottontail rabbit and snowshoe hare hunts will keep on keeping on until March 15. Of course, coyotes are always fair game for the crosshairs but beavers, badgers, weasels, martens, minks, muskrats and river otters can be harvested by trapping only.

Cougar hunts are also still open in many areas around the state but the arrival of the new year has made all of those areas subject to closure depending on the specific harvest numbers from the fall and early winter. Most areas will continue to be open for big cat season through Apr. 30 but hunters should check with the WDFW for up to date information on particular areas and the associated harvest limits.

Lastly, all hunters are required to file reports on their activity for each transport tag no later than Jan. 31. Hunters who fail to meet that deadline, even if they failed to bag a critter, will be forced to pay a $10 fine the next time they purchase a license.

Hunters can report by phone at (8//) 945-3492 or online at https://fishhunt.dfw.wa.gov. Questions can be directed to the WDFW by phone at (360) 902-2464 or by email to licensing@ dfw.wa.gov.

CLAMMIN'

The WDFW has not released any word on the success of a three day razor clam dig last week but anecdotal tales say that there were certainly clams to be found for those who were game to brave near freezing temperature. That set of digs took place on Friday, Saturday and Sunday at Mocrocks and Copalis beach-

The next scheduled razor clam digs are not slated to begin until Jan. 27 but there is at least some hope that the domoic acid tainted water at Twin Harbors may be cleared up enough by then to reopen the beaches to clam digging. The next batch of clam digs are proposed for the following dates, times, tides and

• Jan. 27, Friday, 6:26 p.m.,

• Jan. 28, Saturday, 7:01, -0.6 feet, Copalis

• Jan. 30, Monday, 8:13 p.m.,

• Jan. 29, Sunday, 7:37 p.m.,

• Jan. 31, Tuesday, 8:50 p.m.,

The WDFW typically waits

until about one week prior to the digging dates to provide final approval based on marine toxin testing results.

REGULATION

Last week during a pair of public meetings in Vancouver the Washington Fish and Wildlife Commission voted in favor of implementing the next phase of the state's reform policy on for Columbia River salmon manage ment, the status of endangered species, land purchases and other matters related to Washington's outdoors.

The updated Columbia River salmon policy is part of a joint effort between Washington and Oregon to restructure recreational and commercial salmon fisheries on the Columbia River below Bonneville Dam. First adopted in 2013 the policy was intended to promote conservation of salmon and steelhead, prioritize sport salmon fishing and transition gillnet fisheries into off-channel areas of the lower Columbia by the end of last year. The policy also calls for increased hatchery releases from Columbia River tributaries and the expansion of commercial fishing opportunities through the use of alternative fishing gear. However, the policy was designed to be tweaked along the line and came complete with a four-year transition period with 2017 set as the full implementa-

The most recent modifications to the policy will increase the sport fishery share of fall Chinook from 70 to 75 percent for the next to years before rising to 80 percent in 2019. The original policy called for an 80 percent share by this year. The updated policy will also allow mainstem commercial gillnet fishing for upriver bright fall Chinook upstream of the Lewis River both this year and next but mandates improved monitoring on those fisheries.

Last week the commission also approved a part of the plan pertaining to spring and summer Chinook that will increase the recreational share of those total stocks from 70 to 80 percent in 2017. Additionally, the commission directed WDFW staff to begin implementing the use of alternative commercial fishing gear by 2019 and utilizing a buyback program for commercial gillnet licenses.

"While we have made a couple changes to the policy for the next two years, we are committed to full implementation, meeting conservation goals and transitioning gillnets into off-channels areas," said Larry Carpenter, vice-chair of the commission, in a press release.

The commission also enacted a few "housekeeping" changes to salmon fishing policy setting meetings known as North of Falcon. As part of that effort the commission received a briefing on open public meeting laws related to a surge in public interest for transparency during the annual, and secluded, seasonsetting process.

In wildlife news the commission voted to keep woodland caribou, western pond turtles and sandhill cranes on Washington's list of endangered species. The commissioners also approved a number of land transactions including the purchase of 1,280 acres of DNR land in Chelan County. That acreage will be used for habitat for numerous fish and wildlife species and public outdoor recreation.

Idaho Snowshoe Outing Offers Panoramic Views

IDAHO CITY, Idaho Don't let the Pioneer Fire stop you from exploring the Park N Ski snowshoe trails in the Boise National Forest north of Idaho

I joined a State Parks and Recreation-led hike to Stargaze Point on a recent Saturday, the annual Free Ski & Snowshoe Day for the department.

Our group found acres of untouched powder, spectacular views and no problems related to last year's fire or the lack of machine grooming this winter.

"I loved it," said Tara Burgess of Boise. "We're definitely going to do the (Stargaze) yurt.'

Stargaze Point sits at 6,682 feet, on a wind-swept nob with 360-degree mountain views. The hike is about 1.5 miles one way from the Beaver Creek parking lot. The trail isn't groomed but it's well-marked by blue signs and was packed down for our visit by the people who have been using the nearby Stargaze Yurt.

More terrain is open in the Park N' Ski Area than originally expected. Stargaze Point itself was on the closure list at one point.

For snowshoeing, there are two recommended hikes: Stargaze Point and Banner Ridge, which is about a two-mile hike with 600 feet of elevation gain one way. Those are the only marked trails this winter and they lead to the only two open yurts so they often will be packed ing in the powder.

Expert to Discuss Wolves in Washington

By The News Tribune

Diane Gallegos, executive director of Wolf Haven International, will speak Thursday about the state's wolf recovery plan and how the Wolf Advisory Group is working toward a goal of co-existence with wolves in the wild. Gallegos will be speaking at the meeting of the Tahoma Audubon Society.

Gallegos also will provide an overview Wolf Haven International's mission and its accomplishment during the past 34 years. She has led the group since 2011. Her previous work includes a stint as a field biologist with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in New Mexico.

Wolf Haven provides a sanctuary for captive-born, displaced wolves, offers educational programs and leads conservation efforts.

The event is free and open to the public. The doors open at 7 p.m. for socializing, with the program running from 7:30-8:30 p.m. It will be at the Tacoma Nature Center, 1919 S. Tyler St., Tacoma. Learn more at tahomaaudubon.org.

Packers' Jordy Nelson: Broken Ribs 'Worst Pain I've Ever Felt'

By Tom Silverstein

Milwaukee Journal Sentinel

GREEN BAY, Wis. — As much as Green Bay Packers wide receiver Jordy Nelson would like to say there's a good chance he'll be available for the NFC championship game Sunday, he admitted he's in uncharted territory and isn't sure he can play through two broken ribs.

Nelson attended practice Wednesday and caught some soft throws from a team trainer, but that's a long way from being able to withstand another shot to his left side like the one he took against the New York Giants in a wild-card playoff game at Lambeau Field 11 days ago. Each day, he said, he makes considerable improvement, but there was no indication he was going to be able to take part in practice before Saturday, if at all.

"I've never played receiver with broken ribs," said Nelson, when asked how it would be possible to do so. "We'll find out, hopefully. I don't know if you can prepare. It's one of those things that you'll figure out when you get out there.

"If it happens, we'll see how it goes. But right now I'm just focused on getting back to full motion and doing everything and seeing if we can get that opportunity and it'd be a great chance

Even if Nelson is able to withstand the pain and protect the ribs, he still has to justify with his play being out on the field against the Atlanta Falcons. He wouldn't be doing the team much good if he were 60 or 70 percent and unable to run full speed or reach for passes.

If the medical staff does give him the OK to play, then it's up to the coaches to decide if he would be effective. He said ultimately team physician Patrick McKenzie would decide whether it was safe for him to play, but he's being allowed to go through the rehab process to see how far he can get through the week. It's decided Nelson can't play, but prove that he can be an effective the Packers haven't listed him as out on their injury report, so technically there's a chance.

(It's) a combination of that (and) pain tolerance, Doc's approving that it's OK and being fully functional," Nelson said of the first step. "I've got to be able to go out and perform. I just can't be out there slowly running or just being some random person."

Nelson isn't the only receiver the Packers might not have when they face the Atlanta Falcons on Sunday.

Davante Adams, who injured his ankle late in the divisional playoff victory over Dallas, did not practice and won't until at least Saturday, according to coach Mike McCarthy. The fact the Packers won't even put Adams on the field until then speaks to the severity of the injury last year, tried to come back from it too soon and was not the possible McKenzie already has Like Nelson, he's going to have to ers Max McCaffrey and Antwan ams has 13 catches for 201 yards player in order to be cleared.

Worse yet, No. 4 receiver Geronimo Allison sat out practice with a left hamstring injury. He said he was sitting out for precautionary reasons, but he couldn't say for sure he would practice Thursday and was trying to work through the injury through rehab.

He was carrying around a device that was sending electronic impulses to two pads attached to his hamstring.

"We're just trying to give my body a little rest," he said. "I'd be out there any chance I could get. It's more mental preparation now with the game plan, film. You try to do more with that because you couldn't get physical reps today. That's when you definitely dial in and get some mental work. It's just that time of year."

Goodley ran routes for Rodgers in the early portion of practice open to the media.

Nelson said the one thing he's encouraged about is the improvement he has made each day. He said he did not suffer any injuries other than the broken ribs and stayed overnight in the hospital because he was able to rest comfortably there.

He said the pain was excruci-

"I've never been like that before," he said. "It was the worst pain I've ever felt. Hopefully, it doesn't happen again. It's not

Not having Nelson and Adams in a game in which the Packers are probably going to have to score a lot of points in order to win might just be too much to overcome. The offense was able to keep rolling against the Giants and Cowboys because Adams, Cobb, Allison, tight end Jared Cook and running back Ty Montgomery picked up the slack.

In the two playoff games, Ad-

(15.5 average) and a touchdown. If you take him out of the mix, it makes it easier to cover the others, especially Cook, who has been a key to the team's offensive success and generally hasn't drawn double coverage because of the threat of Adams, Cobb and Montgomery.

Cobb would move into the No. 1 receiver spot with Nelson and Adams out. He has 12 catches for 178 yards and three touchdowns in the playoffs but is better when he's in the slot than when he's outside. If Allison can play, McCarthy can use Cook and Allison as the two outside receivers and Cobb as the slot.

If Allison can't play, then Janis and Davis move up the depth chart. Janis has one catch for 8 yards in the last seven games and Davis had all three of his receptions this season (for 24 yards and a touchdown) in the first Atlanta game Oct. 30.

When asked about the possibility of playing without Nelson and Adams, Rodgers said, "Well, we've won without them before. So we'd like to have them out there, but we'll see what happens."

The Packers don't have many options at receiver. They could use Montgomery there and go with fullback Aaron Ripkowski or backup Christine Michael in the backfield. But a big part of their success has been making teams guess how Montgomery is being used and if Montgomery and Michael are on the field together, the Falcons will know Montgomery is most likely going to be a receiver.

"It's a long week yet," Nelson said. "We've got time until Sunday. Those guys are putting in the time and work to get healthy. Obviously, I think it becomes a mental game right now at this part of the season to make sure you're ready to go, and everyone's banged up. So hopefully they can get healthy and get ready. We'll

Ben Roethlisberger Ready for Challenge of Tom Brady, Patriots

Ben Roethlisberger knows all too well what lies ahead. The Steelers quarterback is under no illusions about how difficult his next challenge will be: venturing into Foxborough with the AFC title on the line.

The Patriots won 14 of the past 16 AFC East championships, including an NFL-record eighth consecutive title this season. They're 16-3 at home in the postseason since 2001 and 33-4 overall there since 2013. And they're led by one of the greatest coachquarterback tandems in history:

"I specifically sought out dog foods that are formulated for dogs that have skin issues, stomach issues, and allergies," Tyson said.

Most of the offerings are grain-free and contain ingredients such as wild-caught salmon.

The right food can mean everything from a shiny coat, to an extra-long life to a sunny disposition

"If you're itchy, you're going to be grumpy," she said.

Tyson has been a dog trainer for much of her life.

Since I was little I'd been taking classes on how to train dogs," she said.

She specialized in dogs with aggression or other difficult behavioral problems and pursued that specialty in part because of a dog she owned with behavioral problems.

"I realized after she had passed from old age that there were things that could've been done," Tyson said.

However, she was advised recently by a doctor that the most strenuous of her training activities would not longer be possible for her.

"My orthopaedic surgeon said ... that my time for doing that was up," she said.

However Tyson still wanted to work with dogs and their people, and decided to open a specialty dog food, dog supply and dog daycare business.

Top 5 New Year's Resolutions for Your Home

Creating a few personal New Year's resolutions is one way give yourself a little extra motivation to make some positive changes in your life. The same can also be true for your home. So as we begin the New Year, take a moment for a little bit of home owner reflection.

There is a good chance your home has a few areas that could be improved, especially if it's more than 10 years old. So when you start to make your list, don't be surprised to find that you and your home have some strikingly similar resolutions.

Lose Weight

One of the toughest resolutions for a person to stick to is losing weight. But for a home, it's one of the easiest. Homes typically become more cluttered after the holidays, often because of the many new purchases that are taking up space. Don't procrastinate until "spring cleaning" time to throw away, re-sell or donate home goods that you no longer

Be More Organized

As you work your way through de-cluttering your home, it's a great opportunity to get reorganized. For example, your home office has perhaps become a wasteland of papers, books or random gadgets. If you re-organized those items—or removed them altogether—you might feel more productive while working.

Take Up a New Hobby

DIY projects can give you a great sense of personal accomplishment. But there are certain projects that are good for the novice, and others that are best left to the professionals. Replacing light fixtures, painting walls and switching out hardware are a few examples of DIY projects that almost anyone can do. But before you pick up a sledgehammer and start knocking down walls, taking up floors or removing cabinets, consult with a remodeler who can provide some professional guidance.

Eat Better and Drink Less

It's easy to over-indulge during the holidays. Likewise, your home might be feeling gluttonous as it over-consumes on electricity and water. There are countless new products—some of which can be installed fairly easily-to improve your home's energy efficiency. From lowflow water fixtures, smart-home thermostats and motion-sensing automated lights, to Energy Star appliances and new double-pane windows, the options are endless. Ask a building professional which features are best suited for your home and your needs.

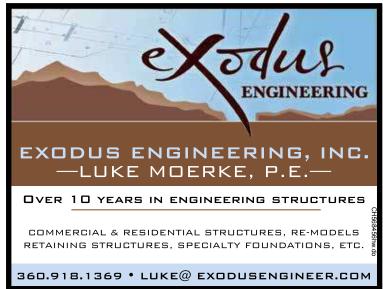

Get Out of Debt

After the holidays, a top priority for many is getting out of debt, or simply better managing their finances. The first step is usually to identify where there might be wasteful spending, and then try to minimize or eliminate those occasions. For your home, you might have several improvements in mind, but doing them all at once would be a challenge logistically and financially. When working with your contractor, you can prioritize your wants and needs and then develop a plan to address them over time. A remodeler can also help you determine which of those improvements will provide the best return on your investment when it comes to saving on energy costs and enhancing your home's value.

Your home is a reflection of you, so it's no surprise that you may have very similar New Year's resolutions. Some of them are much easier to accomplish than others, but the payoff will come in many forms-most importantly, improved comfort for you and your family.

Learn more about which improvements are best suited for your home by contacting a professional. Visit omb.org for a list of members of the Lewis County Chapter of Olympia Master

Cowlitz Bill Nearing Crisis in Legislature

The Cowlitz river dam bill, all-important to the city of Tacoma and the huge $138,000,000 project in central Lewis county, was a step nearer final decision Saturday at Olympia after the House committee on Fisheries grudgingly reported it out with an 11-2 recommendation that it be defeated. The committee action came late Friday and the bill was scheduled to be reported back to the House Saturday afterwheduled to be reported ones ...

With the measure, SB 254, out of committee, Pierce county's 10-man Floure delegation had the hall now on getting the critical legislation passed. Giving all possible the Lewis county

John Seattle, Nephew of Chief Seattle, Dies on Jan. 19, 1924

John Seattle, prominent Auburn resident and nephew of Chief Seattle, passes away at the Tulalip Indian reservation in Snohomish County. He leaves an estate worth more than $50,000.

John Seattle was believed to have been born in the mid-1800s on the White River west of Kent, also the birthplace of Chief Seattle. Both were members of the Duwamish tribe. In the late 1800s, John met and married his wife Mary, who was part Soos Creek, part Snoqualmie, and part Klickitat. Mary owned valuable tracts of land near Puyallup and Ya-

For years, the Seattles lived at the foot of Yesler in a small community known as Dzilzalahlitch. In 1903, John and Mary moved to Auburn, buying a cabin on the Green River, described by the Auburn Globe as being near "the Alex Porter place." They named the cabin Tatalka, which means "quiet place in the river."

In 1908, a large Indian gathering was held at Tatalka, and prominent leaders from almost all the Northwest tribes attended for speech-making and dancing. John Seattle was recognized as a leader and a man of great importance.

Mary passed away in 1922, causing John's health to steadily fail. Two months before his death, John Seattle went to the Tulalip reservation near Marysville, and was tended to At the time of his death, the valuation of John's property, which he acquired from his wife, totaled $50,000. He also possessed $10,000 in cash, making him one of the wealthiest Indians in this part of the country.

Duwamish Tribe Wins Federal Recognition on Jan. 19, 2001, But Loses It Again Two Days Later The Duwamish Tribe wins federal recognition. However, fewer than 48 hours later, the tribe learns that President

George W. Bush has suspended a batch of President Clinton's 11th-hour orders, including federal recognition of the Duwamish. The Duwamish were the indigenous inhabitants of the Seattle area. They have been seeking recognition since 1979, when U.S. District Judge George Boldt (1903-1984) found that the tribe had not existed continuously as an organized tribe (within the meaning of federal law) from 1855 to the present, and was therefore ineligible for treaty fishing rights. A 10-year gap in the record

(from 1915-1925) prompted Boldt's decision as well as a denial of recognition by the Bureau of Indian affairs in 1996. The tribe has assembled additional evidence for its active existence through the decade in question, which prompted the Bureau of Indian Affairs to reverse its 1996 decision. The Duwamish, including Chief Seattle (178?-1866), for whom Seattle is named, were among the signers of the Point Elliott treaty, signed on January 22, 1855, and ratified by the United States Senate in 1859. The treaty guaranteed both fishing rights and reservations.

Unsealed Prince Divorce File Shows Luxe Lifestyle, Dispute Over Videos, Jewels and Photos

MINNEAPOLIS — The unsealed file from Prince's second divorce offers a glimpse into the late musician's luxe lifestyle and the more routine spousal disputes over access to property, such as childhood photos, videos and jewelry.

While they were married, Manuela Testolini said she and Prince threw big parties after major awards shows like the Golden Globes, Oscars and the Grammys. For the events, Testolini would hire a $5,000-a-day stylist to do her hair and makeup. The couple would spend $50,000 per party on food, drinks and decor, the records showed. In 2004 alone, Prince earned $42 million.

"We had accounts at boutiques including Gucci, Versace and Valentino. We had accounts at Saks. There was never any restriction on (Prince's) or my spending," she said.

Divorce files are generally public, though judges often will agree to seal them if both parties to the case agree and no one else objects. The documents, made public after the Star Tribune moved to unseal the files following the star's accidental death in April from the painkiller fentanyl, also revealed that in May 2005, Prince locked Testolini out of their home on Galpin Avenue in Chanhassen. He also cut off her credit cards, boxed up her stuff and stowed it in the vault in Paisley Park for "safe keeping," according to an order signed by former Judge Tanja Manrique on March 16, 2010. Prince then tore down the house.

The couple's divorce was granted in October 2007, but two years later, Testolini claimed Prince had not returned several personal items, including copies of videos he made based on songs he had written for her: "Gamillah" and "Another Girl." He also had not returned jewelry, including a gold and diamond earring set from Tiffany and an antique

At that time, Prince was representing himself and didn't respond to the court.

In her documents, Testolini said Prince claimed the videos had been deleted and he didn't know the whereabouts of the items. She disputed that, saying Prince never destroyed every copy of a video and that if he did, "his actions were purely punitive."

The unsealing of the divorce documents came amid the ongoing legal dispute over the legitimate heirs to Prince's vast fortune. The megastar, who was found dead in an elevator at Paisley Park, had no will. Carv-Eide is overseeing the case. He has indicated that the surviving siblings, including Prince's sister Tyka Nelson and five halfsiblings, will likely claim at least part of a fortune estimated at somewhere between $100 million and $300 million before taxes.

Prince and Testolini, the musician's second wife, met when she was a consultant for his charity, Love 4 One Another, according to the documents. They married on Christmas in 2001 when she was 25 and he was 43. She said they lived "an extravagant lifestyle" with each having their own personal assistant. They had a housekeeper and a personal chef preparing their dinners, the documents showed.

Testolini said she "routinely had massages, spa treatments, manicures, pedicures and facials." She and Prince traveled frequently, renting homes for months at a time in California and Hawaii, flew private planes and spent up to $15,000 per night on hotel suites.

In 2004, Prince released his album "Musicology," which sold more than 2 million copies in the United States. The Musicology tour unseal the files after questioning whether they would shed light on why Prince was taking painkillers, any potential heirs, or the value of his estate at the time of the divorce. The files didn't provide any insight into those issues.

The documents also don't explain why Prince and Testolini divorced, although the couple did seek counseling from New York City-based elders of their shared Jehovah's Witness faith. She has since remarried and had children with another man.

In recent months, Testolini fought the release of the divorce documents, claiming disclosure would put her and her family at risk.

The documents do not show fier County District Judge Kevin nancial details of the final divorce settlement. At one point in the filings, Testolini said she was not seeking permanent monthly support.

She did, however, receive a house in Toronto worth approximately $6 million and a Lexus automobile. During their split, she initially received $10,000 a month in support. Prince also transferred $3 million to an account, Gamillah Holdings Inc., which was opened with $1 million in December 2002 and over which she had control.

In court filings, Prince rejected Testolini's claim that she needed $42,574 a month, which she said amounted to no more than 2 percent of his monthly earnings, to maintain a lifestyle that included attending the awards shows and hosting parties afterward.

"This is my normal life," Prince's response said. "By filing her (divorce) petition, (Testolini) severed her access to this lifestyle ... This is not a marital standard of living that can be recreated with money.'

The documents also include a transcript of a deposition Prince gave in May 2008 where he was questioned by Testolini's

Bryan Cranston and Star Giovanni Ribisi Can Relate to the Con

By Yvonne Villarreal

Los Angeles Times

Awards-show acceptance speeches can sometimes be dull or uninspired; they can be emotional and impassioned; they can even provoke a tweet from the president-elect. But few in fact, just one — become the launching pad for a TV series on Amazon Prime.

That's where Bryan Cranston comes in.

During his 2014 Emmys speech for lead actor in a drama. the former "Breaking Bad" star reflected on his early years as a wayward kid before finding his passion in acting.

"I was a kid who always looked for a shortcut," Cranston said then. "A schemer. My own family nicknamed me Sneaky Pete. My own family."

A day later, Cranston got a call from Zack Van Amburg, the president of Sony Pictures Television, which produced "Breaking Bad."

"He said, 'Congratulations, and by the way, I think Sneaky Pete would make a good show," Cranston recalled during an early-January sit-down in Pasadena. "He said, 'What if you hadn't found your passion at 22? And you went off and now you're 37 — what would you be?' And I thought, that's an interesting premise."

From age 11, Cranston said, he didn't have a father in his life and his mother was an alcoholic.

"There was this big opening," he recalled. "I was kind of on my own, with the exception of a year under my grandparents' auspices. But I really made up my own rules. I did just enough to get by."

Now suddenly those wily years of his youth - of asking teachers what he needed to do to just get a C or discarding most of the newspapers on his paper route to avoid dealing with ornery customers — found a way to intersect with his passion by way of "Sneaky Pete."

The drama, new on Amazon Prime, stars Giovanni Ribisi

as Marius, a con man who gets out of prison only to learn that a gangster (Cranston) he once robbed is on the hunt for him (and his fingers).

To evade his past, Marius assumes the identity of his former cellmate, Pete, and reunites with Pete's colorful family, which is in the bail bonds business and hasn't seen him in about 20 years. From there it's a constant race to keep up the act. The cast also includes Margo Martindale, Peter Gerety, Marin Ireland and Shane McRae.

"I had been trying to figure out how to make a series out of the world of bail bonds, because I was attracted to that milieu," said Cranston, who also directed and wrote for the series. "It's a breath away from criminality, and yet you deal with the judicial system and law enforcement and it felt really ripe for something to be living in there — this guy who hasn't changed his ways and gets involved in a world that could be a real talent that he has. Yet he's not even who he says he is. Everything's a con."

Cranston originally developed the show with David Shore ("House") as a CBS procedural. When the network passed, Shore exited and was replaced by "Justified" creator and executive producer Graham Yost. As such, the identity of the series underwent its own transformation, going from a crime-of-the-week procedural to a more streamingfriendly, serialized drama.

"I think we did a pretty good job of letting that clock roll," Yost said of crafting episodes that he hopes will seduce viewers into watching the next one.

Yost was seated next to Ribisi and a scruffy-faced Cranston in an empty Pasadena hotel room, where the threesome were in the throes of a day of press to promote the show.

When one had a moment of thoughtful reflection on the show, it often provoked playful wise-cracking from the other such as when Cranston used a clay metaphor to describe Yost's crafting of the series and Yost made a quip about the iconic "Ghost" pottery scene.

But when it comes to conning, they all agree it's a fun space to play in - and a relatable one to some degree.

"Elmore Leonard always said, 'Why be a criminal unless you're having fun?" Yost said, referencing the late author whose short story, "Fire in the Hole," served as the basis for "Justified."

"Yeah," Ribisi said, "I grew up being an actor, so being devious and manipulative and lying all the time just goes without saying."

Cranston added: "When you first start out as an actor, especially as a child as you (Giovanni) were, you do look for the hook - 'How can I hold on to this? How can I fake my way through and pretend I'm something else.' When you mature as an actor, you don't look for the way to fake your way through, you actually look for 'How can I build a foundation of truth so I can actually build something that even I believe?' And then from there you look for honest moments, and it's a transition. Some actors can make it, some don't."

Yost said he wanted to capture the element of the thrill that results from such risk-taking but also show the cost that inevitably comes with it. He also wanted to simultaneously let viewers in on the con and keep them in the dark. For research, Yost and the show's team watched con artist movies.

"I watched about three or four just in one weekend," Yost said. "The Sting," was one. One of the things with that story is, you have to be in on the con, a lot of it. But there is also an agreement that the audience makes, which is, 'You're going to con us, and we're OK with that, we buy into that — "

"And we can't wait to find out what it is," Ribisi added. "But we won't make it too easy."

Spoken like a true Sneaky

ADVICE: Dear Abby

Mom Gives Blessing to Kids Attending Church With Grandma

DEAR ABBY: I am an atheist. My parents, although raised Presbyterian, never to my knowledge participated in organized religion, so it was not part of my upbringing.

Last year mom started going to church again, and my kids have been going with her.

I've always said they can make their own choices and I'd support them.

Mom is about to go south for the rest of the winter and there's no obvious church member the kids can go with, but they'd like to keep attending. Would it be wrong for me to go with them on Sundays, even though I don't believe in the church doctrine and won't be otherwise involved in the organization?

I'm sure I could be unobtrusive, but I'm not sure what to say if someone asks why I'm there -- especially since I'll stop going once my mother returns to town. The kids are tweens and not old enough to go alone. What do you think? - WHAT'S APPROPRIATE?

DEAR WHAT'S: When people see one another in a house of worship, they usually assume that they are equally religious and that's why they're there. However, if you are asked why you're there, all you have to say is that your children enjoy being there and your mother is away, so you brought them. I don't think it's necessary to announce to anyone that you're an atheist.

DEAR ABBY: My hus- Angeles, CA 90069.

band is constantly complaining about the cost of groceries. He recently graduated from college and now works in the corporate world making substantially more than he did before. I'm 16 weeks pregnant, but before I quit my job I was working full time and would buy all the groceries. Now that my husband shares an account with me, he constantly makes me feel bad for buying food.

Abby, I'm not talking about $300 a week; it's more like $70 a week for food. Yet he spends twice that amount on beer, video games and lunches for himself. I have told him numerous times how horrible he makes me feel, and have even cried about it, but today he brought up the topic again. He is making me depressed and afraid of buying food for fear of being mocked and "guilted." What am I to do? — THE COST OF GROCERIES

DEAR COST: Your husband should be ashamed of himself. The next time he complains, stand your ground and tell him in no uncertain terms it's time to grow up and cut it out. He's no longer a kid; he's a married man with responsibilities. Those groceries are feeding his wife and child, and you both need all the nourishment you can get right now.

Also, stress for a woman in your expectant condition isn't good for you or the baby. I think it's time the guilt trip worked both ways, don't you?

HOROSCOPES

Friday, January 20, 2017

Slide into your comfort zone and enjoy what life has to offer. Working on the pursuits that bring you the greatest satisfaction will help you find solace and joy.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)

Don't let uncertainty get you down. Go over all the fine details of any situation you face and plan the best way to counter anything that stands out as problematic

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Partnerships look promising. Engage in talks that will give you a clear-cut view of how you can work alongside someone vou respect. A romantic gesture will enhance your personal life. GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Protect your money and possessions. Don't feel obliged to pay for someone who isn't putting forth an effort. Take care of your responsibilities and take credit for what you do. CANCER (June 21-July 22) Share your ideas. Network, socialize and collaborate with people you find inspiring. Together, you will find common ground as well as build a strong alliance. LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

Stay focused on what's important to you. Work quietly on your own until you have everything in place. An intricate, detailed presentation will make people aware and eager to take action. VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

Put more energy, thought and time into the things you want to accomplish. If you stop thinking and start doing, you will exceed your expectations. Doing something romantic would be a good move. LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23)

You should take time to listen to your co-workers or to get involved in industry events that could influence your position. Keep up with technology and the latest trends. SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22)

Share your feelings and build a brighter future with someone special. Love, romance and improvements to your personal life will give you the leverage you need to reach your goals. SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21)

Sharing will only work if balance is maintained. Don't pay for someone else's mistakes or expect anyone to pick up the slack if you fall short. Joint ventures will be disappointing CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

You'll have some unique ideas that must not be ignored. Taking a different approach to the way you do things will draw positive attention and interest in your personal and professional circles.

Saturday, January 21, 2017

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Take whatever others do in stride, but don't let it ruin your plans. Consider ways you can bring about physical improvements using methods that have worked for you in the past.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20)

A personal promise you make to someone will improve your life. Discussions and plans can be put in place, and a joint effort will set you up

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You may want to contain your enthusiasm and refrain from sharing personal or secret information. Divulging such secrets prematurely will create an opening for someone wishing to dismantle your plans.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)

Sharing your feelings and plans with someone special will lift your spirits and give you the incentive you need to take care of unfinished business.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)

Work hard and bring about change. No one will do your job for you, or do it the way you want. An open mind and disciplined attitude will lead to victory.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)

Make relationships a priority and share your feelings. Make plans that will encourage you to strive for a bigger and better life, without going into debt or upsetting someone you love.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Put some action behind your words and see what happens. Don't expect to win favors or get everything you want, but you must make your point heard in order for change to eventually take

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Get involved in activities that will allow you to show off your skills. Someone you find interesting will want to partner with you. Social activities will encourage new opportunities.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23)

relationships.

Show a little compassion when it comes to how you carry out your plans. Ask questions and offer incentives and whatever else it takes to keep important relationships running smoothly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Make changes at home or to your lifestyle that will help you achieve your personal goals. A little romance or family fun will help build better are doing, don't take part. Relationship problems will be costly if you are too giving or generous. Don't be gullible when you should be asking questions.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You'll outshine any competition you encounter. You can advance personally and professionally if you follow your head and let your skills and experience lead the way. Romance is encouraged.

Defendants.

No. 16-2-00889-21 SUMMONS BY PUBLICATION

TO THE DEFENDANTS Unknown Heirs and Devisees of Robert L. Thompson; Star Thompson; and Occupants of the Premises:

You are hereby summoned to appear within sixty (60) days after the date of the first publication of this summons, to wit, within sixty (60) days after December 22, 2016, and defend the real property foreclosure action in Lewis County Superior Court, and answer the complaint of Nationstar Mortgage LLC, ("Plaintiff"). You are asked to serve a copy of your answer or responsive pleading upon the undersigned attorneys for Plaintiff at its office stated below. In case of your failure to do so, judgment will be rendered against you according to the demand of the complaint, which has been filed with the Clerk of said

The purpose of this lawsuit is to obtain a judgment, and if not immediately paid, to be satis-fied through the foreclosure of real property located in Lewis County, Washington, and legally described as follows:

Lots 15, 16, 17, and 18, Block 4, Boulevard Addition to the City of Centralia, as recorded in volume 1 of plats, page 124, records of Lewis County, Washington. Except the Southerly 4.75 feet, more or less, of Lot 18, Block 4, Boulevard Addition to the City of Centralia, more particularly described as that Southerly portion of

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS

Ads will run in the Business & Service Directory for 30 consecutive publishing days without changes to copy or layout. If you have any questions, please call Customer Service at (360) 807-8203.

Chapter 18.27.100 of the Revised Code of Washington requires that all advertisements for construction-related services include the contractor's current Department of Labor and Industries registration number in the advertisement. Failure to obtain a Certificate of Registration from L&I or to show the registration number in all advertising will result in a fine up to $5000 against the unregistered contractor. For more information, call Labor & Industries Specialty Compliance Services Division at (800) 647-0982 or check L&I's website at: www.lni.wa.gov.
