Centralia Man Jailed After Ramming a Police Vehicle, Fleeing

By Natalie Johnson and Kaylee Osowski

The Chronicle

A Centralia man was arrested Tuesday on a state Department of Corrections warrant after allegedly ramming a police vehicle with his car and leading officers on a foot chase off of Lincoln Creek Road.

Guadalupe J. Aguirre, 35, of Centralia, is being held at the Lewis County Jail on $50,000 bail set in Superior Court Wednesday for second-degree assault and a felony DOC warrant for allegedly escaping from community custody.

Lewis County Deputy Prosecutor Kevin Nelson requested bail to be set at $50,000 based on the allegations in the case.

"We think $50,000 would be appropriate to protect community safety," Nelson said.

Defense Attorney Joely O'Rourke requested bail to be set at $25,000.

Superior Court Judge Richard Brosey said he is aware of much of Aguirre's criminal history and agreed with the Prosecutor's Office. He said he initially thought bail should be higher.

Aguirre was arrested after the DOC Community Response Unit, a fugitive task

Guilty Conscience: Stolen Sign Returned After 30 Years

NEW SMYRNA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — It took 30 years, but a guilty conscience led someone who stole a large metal sign in Florida to return it — along with a $50 money order — to the New Smyrna Beach Police Depart-

A picture of the sign was posted Wednesday on the police department's Facebook page. It says: New Smyrna Beach Says No to Drugs.

Officials say the blue sign arrived in the mail with a note asking officials to use the money to reinstall the sign. The anonymous person asked for forgiveness, adding the sign was stolen in the late 1980s during "a fit of youthful exuberance.'

On Facebook, department officials said that the "act of contrition" gives hope that people can do the right thing, even if it takes 30 years.

Wedding Thief Sentenced to Seven Years in California Prison

SAN DIEGO (AP) — A thief who posed as a guest at California weddings and stole wallets, credit cards and cash from brides, guests and wedding workers will be honeymooning in prison.

KNSD-TV said Denise Gunderson was sentenced Wednesday to seven years behind bars. She has previous felony convictions.

Prosecutors say last year, Gunderson showed up at several San Diego County weddings, went into rooms and offices and stole valuables during the ceremonies.

Authorities say Gunderson used the credit cards to make thousands of dollars in purchases at Costco, Walmart and other stores — sometimes only minutes after the wedding vows were taken.

Surveillance video caught Gunderson at several wedding locations and stores.

She was arrested last December in Las Vegas and pleaded guilty in February to grand theft and identity theft.

Outake: Remembering Merle Haggard in Napavine

Merle Haggard laughs while playing a guitar solo during his performance in August 2006 with his nine-member band, The Strangers, at the Napavine Amphitheater. He concentrated on his hits, from jailhouse lament "Mama Tried" to the wistful "Silver Wings," which he dedicated to soldiers everywhere. He called himself a "hillbilly" musician with "an old beer joint band." In that spirit, he called the Napavine venue a "pretty nice joint." Haggard died earlier this week at the age of 79.

Centralia Business Caters to Families During Pregnancy Process

NEW TO AREA: Offerings Include Baby Clothes, Doula Services, Support Groups

By Justyna Tomtas

jtomtas@chronline.com

In order to provide services to customers in Lewis County who would otherwise go without, North Star Boutique and Compass Birthing Services caters their business to expecting families.

Both businesses are located in the same building at the Fairway Shopping Center, complementing each other and providing goods and services that would not otherwise be available in Lewis County.

Rachel Lomedico, co-owner of the business, said the boutique adds to the already established birthing service by providing products such as cloth diapers, maternity clothes and reusable swim diapers.

"We carry high quality baby items that are hard to get in the area," she said.

The store features different lines of baby carriers, amber teething necklaces, and two products from the Oakville and Olympia areas.

Both Lomedico and her husband Curtis Foote are doulas. They help families navigate pregnancy, birth and the transition into a new family. By providing physical, emotional and informational support during and after birth, Lomedico said the duo help their clients continuously by sharing their knowledge and lending a helping hand.

Compass Birthing Services, which was established about two years ago, also offers a variety of classes and focuses on both the mother and her partner.

Foote said this is an important aspect of the business because often the father is not heavily included in the process.

"Outside of pregnancy, it's hard to find information or a place for support," he said, adding he hopes to educate fathers and other partners so they can be actively involved in the process. From changing diapers, to supporting the mom with whatever needs she may have, he hopes to provide partners with more information to make life easier for everyone.

"It gets the dad on the same page. It gives him tools to put in sition into being a dad," he said.

Partners aren't always the father of the child, Lomedico explained. Sometimes it can be a mother, a best friend or a relative helping the mother through the process. All are welcome and included in the

Prior to establishing the storefront, Lomedico said the majority of their work as doulas came out of the Olympia area. Now they hope to bring some of the birth culture to Lewis County.

Couple Plans to Open Marijuana Business Near Vader

REQUEST TO OPEN: Owners

Ask Commissioners to Eliminate Federal Permit Requirement in Draft Ordinance

By Kaylee Osowski

kosowski@chronline.com

For about the past two months, Angel and Scott Swanson have been converting a former diner off of Exit 59 near Vader into a marijuana shop.

But in order to open, Lewis County needs to allow pot to be sold in unincorporated areas of the county.

All marijuana businesses are currently banned in the county due to a moratorium that is set to expire at the end May. The moratorium was first adopted in December 2013. It has been extended every six months while an ordinance to regulate the industry in the county is being finalized.

But even if the county doesn't renew the moratorium and allows marijuana businesses to open under its regulations, one of the requirements in the current draft of the ordinance is for owners to get a federal permit.

Angel said she looked into the requirement. After talking to multiple people at the Drug Enforcement Administration, she learned the federal government doesn't issue a permit or certificate for schedule one drugs.

"I dug because I really want one," she said.

The Swansons, of Puyallup, met with county commissioners Edna Fund and Gary Stamper Wednesday and asked them to eliminate the requirement from the ordinance or require marijuana businesses to apply for it when it is available.

Having been converted from being against all drug use, including marijuana, to now selling it, Angel said she can see both sides of the issue.

"We're really anxious to work with you guys," she said.

Stamper said he is concerned about negative impacts of marijuana, having seen the effects in the school system as a former educator.

They spend about 30 minutes with each patient, who fill out 12-page forms and provide identifying information to purchase medical marijuana. The system will be the same in Lewis County.

The Swansons' building outside of Vader has a wheelchair ramp leading to the door to enter the patient area. The other half of the building will be for pipes and other accessories.

The shop also has a 24-hour security system.

Their stores would create 36 full-time and 12 part-time union jobs, she said.

FSA Offers Loans to Beginning and Underserved Farmers

By The Chronicle

The Farm Service Agency, a branch of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, is offering loans to family farmers and ranchers. The loans are intended for individuals who are currently unable to obtain commercial credit, especially new farmers or those lacking the net worth required to qualify for traditional avenues of credit.

The FSA loan program defines a beginning producer as someone who is "substantially" involved in the operation, but has not operated a farm or ranch for more than 10 years. Additionally, when applying for farm ownership loans, a farmer must have at least a three year history working on the farm, but they may not own a farm greater than 30 percent of the average size farm in their county.

Loans made directly by the FSA typically come with a lower interest rate, but max out at $50,000 to $300,000. The FSA direct loan program also offers a down payment plan intended to assist socially disadvantaged and beginning farmer applicants in

'The Centralia College job fairs have had quite positive results," said Joan Rogerson, coordinator of student employment at the college, adding that local and regional employers will be present to discuss part-time, fulltime, seasonal and even apprenticeship opportunities.

With Pending Retirements, Lewis County Superior Court Will Have New Look in 2017

CHANGES: Retirements of Nelson Hunt and Richard Brosey Coincide With Announcements by Would-Be Replacements Andrew Toynbee and Joely O'Rourke

One way or another, two of Lewis County's three Superior Court judges will be newcomers to the bench come January.

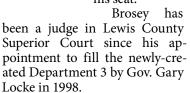

In December, Judge Nelson Hunt, of Department 1, who has been on the bench since 2004, announced he would not seek re-

Season of Speed is Underway at South Sound Speedway

45TH SEASON: Full Schedule of Races on the Books Through September

By Cindy Teixeira

For The Chronicle

Speedway South Sound opened up last weekend for its 45th season and the atmosphere was like a family reunion.

Drivers, mechanics and race fans dusted off the winter blues to get their speed on at the Rochester track. The first race of the season doesn't necessarily attract a big crowd, according to Lyle Sexton, advertising consultant for the track, but the weather was cooperating Saturday so he couldn't predict attendance.

With the beautiful Scatter Creek nearby, and easy access from Interstate 5 or points east, the speedway is like a time trip in many ways. The sport hasn't changed much because the object is to move around the track faster than anyone else. The cars may have different categories and styles, but the human factor remains in regard to driving skill, mechanical readiness and fan expectations. What's constant is that anything can happen at a car race.

Inside the gates of the speedway, it's like a friendly little city. Everyone is happy to be there. In addition to the oval where the public action takes place, there are a number of unseen amenities pertinent to racing and car owners in general.

First, they are the only track with their own tow trucks, medical aid crew and street sweeper. They also have a track dryer that is pulled behind a truck. No races are held if the track is not dry.

Nick Behr, son of owners Butch and Maureen Behr. Nick Behr also takes care of the online presence. What may come as a surprise to some people, he said, is that many drivers and owners of race cars don't do their own repairs.

Full auto body service is also offered on track property. So a driver could wreck it, blow the engine, or need something as simple as an oil filter and not have to leave the speedway to take care of it.

The track was bustling with activity Saturday during the season's onsite and repair shop run by track dryer's battery. Meanwhile, kids and teen admission.

While South Sound Speedway is considered a hobby track, some of its drivers have moved into the NASCAR world, including Greg Biffle, from Camas who cut his racing teeth on short tracks in

Tenino Eyeing Yelm Police Officer for Chief Position

LEADER: Don Moody of the Yelm Police Department Awaiting Final Approval Before Taking Over as Tenino Police Chief

By Jordan Nailon

Tenino is one step closer to having a new chief of police.

During a special meeting on March 31, the Tenino City Council confirmed the application of Officer Don Moody, currently of the Yelm Police Department.

Moody is Tenino Mayor Wayne Fournier's personal appointee for the position. Despite the council's recent confirmation, there are a few steps remaining in the hiring process.

Fournier and Moody have been reluctant to speak on the ongoing process, citing past issues the city has encountered while trying to get a police chief in place.

"In the past I think we've gotten the cart in front of the horse," said Moody. "I know they confirmed my application, but I still have some additional processes to go through."

Fournier said that one of the steps remaining for Moody is a hire could be made official as

"I'm the only one who has seen this person's (Moody) application. I'm the only one who knows all his qualifications," said Fournier at the special meeting.

Despite Moody's 10 years of experience in law enforcement, some council members have also expressed concern over Moody's lack of management experience. For his part, Moody is not sure what will happen as the process continues. He simply expressed a desire to wrap up all of the formalities of the hiring process and to begin his work policing the Tenino community. Still, Moody noted, "Nothing is firm at this point."

Tenino City Council meetings are held on the second and fourth Tuesdays of each month and begin at 7 p.m. The next meeting will be on April 12 at Tenino City Hall.

Tenino has been without a police chief since the termination of former chief John Hutchings in March 2015. Hutchings was fired for working an excess of hours. Since his termination, he has filed a defamation lawsuit for $850,000.

A Perplexing Indifference on Charter Schools

Bv The Seattle Times

Washington's charter-school advocates have walked on egg-shells for more than a year.

First, they had to wait almost a year for the state Supreme Court to rule on opponents' lawsuit; then they had to stand by for the Legislature to remedy the court's decision to close them; and finally they had another nail-biting wait to see whether Gov. Jay Inslee would veto the bipartisan, commonsense legislation to keep them open permanently.

Other Views

A sense of closure finally came Friday when Inslee said he would let the bill become law — without his signature — two days later.

The good news is Washington's charter school experiment finally can continue for about 1,100 students statewide and for others to come.

But Inslee's indifference to charter schools is disappointing.

He should be championing them. His non-signing of the bill — the first time that has happened since 1981 — all but invites lawsuits.

It also seems an effort to delegitimize a thoughtful, evidence-based approach to education.

Charter schools have already been embraced by 42 other states, President Obama and the National Education Association.

With his re-election campaign looming, Inslee's non-signature gimmick seems aimed at appeasing the state's most powerful political entity, the teachers' union, which led the fight against charter schools.

In 2012, the Washington Education Association spent $2.6 million, which included support for Inslee and against Initiative 1240, the measure that created the state's charter school system.

Despite the opposition, charter schools now have certainty. But the waiting comes with a cost — new charter schools are not likely to open this fall, said Tom Franta, CEO of the Washington State Charter School Association. Eight currently operate statewide.

Those charter schools have remarkably diverse student bodies, as intended by the law. More than 70 percent are students of color, and nearly 40 percent of charter-school teachers are people of color — the latter is triple the percentage at other public schools. More than two-thirds of students qualify for free or reduced price lunches.

And these students are already achieving. Too bad the adults have gotten in the way for so long.

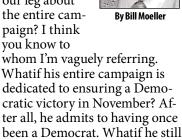

COMMENTARY: I Was Just Thinking ...

Another Deep and Incisive Look at an Upcoming Election

My 4 a.m. muse, Amnesia, visited me again: This time with the creation of a new parlor game. Actually, since there's no way to keep score, there are no losers. So it probably can't be called a game. I have no illusions that it'll become as popular or lucrative as Monopoly, but I call it "Whatif."

Here's the way it's played. You simply ask yourself, "Whatif?"

For instance: Whatif one of the main candidates for presidency of this country is just pulling our leg about the entire campaign? I think you know to whom I'm vague is, and his object is to split the Republican vote?

Whatif that's the reason he agreed to honor the Republican agenda, and now hints that he may change his mind. Is that also part of that plan? Let me ask you this: Do you think that a man with such a massive ego might want to go down in history as someone who changed the destiny of a nation? My answer to that quotes a politically incorrect response from an old comic strip, "You betchum, Red Ryder."

Could those obviously phony facial expressions he often gets on his face — the ones that would shame the most amateur of actors — be just a test to see how far he can go without being unmasked? The same might be applied to the vision of a multimillionaire donning a baseball cap at times to show he's "just one of the guys."

He knows he has a following, enough to split votes from any other Republican candidate, Whatif he decides to break away, as he's still hinting he might do, and run as a third party candidate. That'd ensure a Democratic victory, which would achieve my initial postulation.

Whatif he follows the example of Hitler and can identify a specific race or population to hate. Oh, wait, he's already done that with illegal aliens, which has the approval of another segment of the entire population: the gun-toting macho male.

This year's Republican National Convention should be fun to watch, if he hasn't already broken away by then. Anyway, that's the idea of how my new parlor game "Whatif" could enliven our lives.

But wait! What if I'm right? What if I've exposed and ruined a plan of national proportions? Can I now expect a gang of goons wearing, possibly, brown shirts to gently massage my person with the application of aluminum baseball bats?

One more item. His campaign has also brought up another example of Closed Caption error. In reporting on his statement that women who oppose a state's ban on abortion should be punished, the phrase got printed as "should be published."

In conclusion, a personal note to the woman who asked me in Safeway about a previous column on player pianos. Contact me at the email address below, and I can put you in touch with someone better qualified to answer your question.

Lewis County Power Rankings: Getting Back to the Roots of Ranking

"That's like a mom telling her family she's got

$100 earmarked for some fun adventure/project and then telling the kids their ideas sucked and she's spending it on a Match.com account."

People get lost. Time passes, their motivations fade, directions become confused and, at some point, they need to step back and check the compass again before taking another step.

I'm talking, naturally, about this dumb column, which hasn't actually done any TRUE "power ranking" in about a "power ranking" year. Sure, it's almost always presented in a vaguely-listish form, but does it accomplish its true purpose—namely, to inform you, the reader, about which local news items news items should be held in higher regard than the other drivel editor Eric Schwartz has deemed worthy of your attention.

Bv Aaron VanTuyl

Instead, then, I'll run through Tuesday's edition of The Chronicle (the whole Main section!) and perform a proper bit of ranking.

1. CHEHALIS BASIN HABITAT PROJECTS: Six million to rebuild hamster tubes for fish? That's power.

2. JOHN BRAUN: The Republican from Centralia (and yet I've never seen him at the B&D or O'Blarney's. Just how Centralia IS he?) is rerunning for the state

3. GOODWILL. Someone told me that clothing donated to a Goodwill facility is then taken to a different facility so you don't end up wearing your neighbor's clothes. I have no idea if this is true, but I doubt it. Doesn't that take some of the fun out of it? I want to buy a battered too-large suit knowing there's at least a possibility that a local school administrator got fired in it.

ministrator got fired in it.

4. NINA NIGHTSHADE: All hail the 2016 Miss Yard Bird! The runner-up was Bree Brier, and a woman who called herself Rocket took third. I feel like the Miss Yard Bird pageant (unlike the Miss Lewis County pageant) wouldn't turn up its nose at the idea of a regular guy like me on the judge's panel.

5. CHRISTINA PALOMARES: Ms.
Palomares' alleged automotive adventures on Friday included (being seen) throwing beer cans out of her van, trying to hit another vehicle, assaulting a woman who tried to take her keys and hitting a woman with her car door. Impossibly, her list of offenses didn't include driving with a suspended license cense.

6. COUNTY COMMISSION. The LC Commissioners are considering revamping their process for applying for lodging tax dollars, which (basically) are tax dollars brought in by businesses making money off of tourism that are then redistributed (by the LCC) to organizations/agencies/projects/events that increase tourism. Astute followers of the commission will remember that last year the commission changed the application rules and then pushed all of the lodging tax dollars into its Discover Lewis County website, which was created and is maintained by ... the county. That's like a mom telling her family she's got $100 earmarked for some fun adventure/project and then telling the kids their ideas sucked and she's spending it on a Match.com account to make herself more attractive to potential "tourists." (You know what would ALSO be a great use of tourism dollars? Sidewalks on Borst Avenue. There's pretty much no better way to promote your county than a regional "Kids Ask County for Sidewalks. What Happens Next Will AMAZE You" headline. You could even put the story on your own self-funded-with-tourismdollars website!)

That about wraps it up for Tuesday's paper. There's a bunch more cool stuff in today's paper, namely the thing about a poor horse in East Lewis County getting stuck in the mud. (The photos that go with it are pretty heart-wrenching. Say what you will about Pete Caster, but when there's a sad animal situation he's gonna come back with something provocative.)

Average Rents in Thurston County Getting Closer to $1,000 per Month

Looking for an apartment in Thurston County? Be prepared to search and spend because vacancy rates are low and rents continue to rise, according to new apartment data released this

The first-quarter Apartment Insights of Seattle data show that the county's vacancy rate has tightened to 3.1 percent and average rents rose to $971, a new high for the county, said Tom Cain, the company's principal.

A year ago, the county's vacancy rate was 4.3 percent and average rents were $893, he said.

A number of factors are driving the apartment market: job growth, people wanting to live here — particularly retirees and low inventory for singlefamily homes. Unable to find a home, the first-time homebuyer might remain a renter until they can find something to buy.

Stanley E. Lawrence

Stanley Everett Lawrence, 86, of Randle, Wash., passed away peacefully March 31, 2016 at his daughter's home in Chehalis, Wash. Stan led a hard-working, adventuresome life. Those who knew Stan will remember his warm greeting and appreciation of a good humor. His family was very important and many gatherings were centered around Stan and Gladys preparing a meal. Stan was a butcher and grocery store owner earlier in life, so well prepared meat was his forte.

He wore many hats throughout his life. He was a founding member of the Packwood Fire Department and became chief there. Later, the family moved to Randle, where they owned and operated Modern Food Grocery, where he was also in the fire department. From there, he went to work in Alaska as the Fire Chief for Alyeska in Valdez. He wrapped up his working career working in maintenance at Cowlitz Stud Mill, Morton, Wash. Even though he was technically "retired," Stan never stopped; he always had something in the works, including many gardening projects, producing beautiful flowers. His days started with a list, he always had things to do.

Police Release Composite Images of Suspects in 1986 Slayings

TACOMA: Jennifer Bastian and Michella Welch Were Both Killed in North End Parks 30 Years Ago

By Stacia Glenn

The News Tribune

In an effort to shake loose new leads in the slayings of two Tacoma girls in 1986, police are using DNA to predict what the men responsible for the killings might have looked like.

Police on Wednesday released two composite renderings of the men who are believed to have sexually assaulted and killed Michella Welch, 12, and Jennifer Bastian, 13, in two North End parks.

Detectives last week said for the first time that they no longer believe the same man killed both girls, giving new direction to two of the most heart-wrenching cases in the city's history.

The images were created by Parabon NanoLabs Inc., a Virginia-based company that analyzed the DNA samples, identified genetic markers, such as eye and hair color, and used phenotyping to predict what the men might have looked like.

"After 30 years, we're using the most advanced technology that's available now to provide the public with descriptions of possible suspects that will trigger a memory and prompt them to call in a tip," police spokeswoman Loretta Cool said Wednesday. Then we can go out and contact them and hopefully make an ar-

DNA Leads to New Profiles

Although the Welch and Bastian cases are 30 years old, detectives have never stopped working They've stayed in touch with both families. At least six DNA tests have been run on evidence since the first test was done in 1988. A behavioral profile of the killer was developed in 2013.

Detectives Gene Miller, who now retired, and Lindsey Wade, who heads up the cold case unit, presented the cases to a 20-member panel of experts at the National Center for Missing & Exploited Children three years

While reviewing the case in 2013, Miller noticed a piece of physical evidence found near Bastian's body that had never been tested for DNA so he sent

New Warning: 'Troubling Changes' to Pacific Ocean Chemistry

By The Daily World

A new report from a 20-member panel of University of Washington and National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration scientists says that failure to adequately respond to a humancaused fundamental change in seawater chemistry, known as ocean acidification, could have devastating ecological consequences for the West Coast in the decades to come.

That warning comes Monday from the first published report from findings of the West Coast Ocean Acidification and Hypoxia (OAH) Science Panel.

sions are triggering troubling changes to ocean chemistry along the West Coast that redinated regional approach," the panel of scientific experts unanimously concluded.

"Due to the combined impacts of ocean acidification and seasonal upwelling, the West Coast is exposed to unusually high volumes of seawater at elevated acidity levels," said Richard Feely of NOAA's Pacific Marine Environmental Laboratory in Seattle.

"The acidity of West Coast waters is anticipated to continue to accelerate in lockstep with rising atmospheric carbon dioxide emissions," Feely added.

The panel outlines a series of potential management actions "Global carbon dioxide emis- that the governments of Washington, Oregon, California and British Columbia can immediately begin implementing to off-

The report said global carbon emissions are the dominant cause of ocean acidification and that the West Coast states should advance regional carbon management strategies.

The Tri-City Herald re-Judge Sets September Trial in Oregon Refuge Standoff Case

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — The federal judge overseeing Oregon's wildlife refuge standoff case scheduled a September trial on Wednesday and reinforced her decision to send Ammon and Ryan Bundy to Nevada next week for a court appearance.

U.S. District Court Judge Anna Brown made those decisions during a testy hearing in which she repeatedly admonished lawyers for making repetitive points and threatened to remove one of the defendants from the court.

The packed courtroom included a majority of the 26 defendants charged with taking over the Malheur National Wildlife Refuge for 41 days this winter in a protest over land policy. Lawyers for all the defendants were there as well, and their competing interests and schedules add to the complexity of the case the judge must oversee. Brown scheduled jury selection to begin Sept. 7, despite objections from several attorneys who said that wasn't enough time to prepare and wanted the trial pushed back to 2017. Other lawyers supported the late summer date.

The judge left open the possibility for an eventual delay, but she said the right to a speedy trial is paramount for now. There's also the chance of two different trials, one for defendants who want to go early and one for those who want next year. The judge upheld her decision to have the Bundy brothers and two other defendants flown to Las Vegas next week for a court appearance and then returned to Oregon within 10 days.

German Paper Says It Won't Publish All Offshore Files

BERLIN (AP) — The German newspaper that first obtained the so-called Panama Papers, a vast trove of documents on offshore companies, said Thursday that it won't publish all the files, arguing that not all are of public interest.

Sueddeutsche Zeitung received the documents from an unidentified source more than a year ago and shared at least parts of them with dozens of other media outlets around the world. Since the first reports were published Sunday, prominent politicians, celebrities and businesspeople have had their offshore business dealings dragged into the spotlight, prompting a flurry of public outrage, official investigations and fierce denials from some of those named.

Sueddeutsche Zeitung said the complete set of 11.5 million documents "won't be made available to the public or to law enforcement agencies. That's because the SZ isn't the extended arm of prosecutors or the tax investigators."

Concealed Carry: Washington School District Sticks to Guns

The Yakima Hereald-Republic

TOPPENISH — Toppenish has long embraced its motto of "Where the West Still Lives."

Some have argued Toppenish School District leaders fully embraced it in 2014, when the school board agreed to allow some administrators to carry concealed pistols.

It wasn't a stunt. Superintendent John Cerna and others worked on the policy for more than a year, feeling it was the best option to keep students and staff safe and they stand by their decision.

"It doesn't have anything to do with us being cowboys," Cerna said. "It has to do with safety."

Toppenish went forward with the controversial measure and everything it carried with it — many hours of training, outof-the-box thinking, and ample supporters and critics.

Two years later, the decision reverberates regionally, as the issue has picked up traction in a few other school districts.

The Toppenish educators equipped with guns have not needed to use them. However, Cerna said in the event of an emergency he and his armed staff members would be ready.

"I believe Toppenish School District is the safest in the country right now, not just in the state," he said.

Element of Surprise

When the concealed-carry policy was adopted, 12 Toppenish administrators volunteered to carry guns. Today, that number is 18, one of whom is Cerna. He said there is at least one armed adult in each of the district's buildings. Each has an easilyconcealed gun, such as the Desert Eagle 9mm semi-automatic pistol Cerna carries.

Who are the other 17? Cerna would not disclose their names.

However, three of the other armed administrators agreed to be interviewed by the Yakima Herald-Republic, provided their names were not used. They cited the need for school security for insisting on anonymity.

"Our names being out there, it weakens the purpose of us" defending students and staff, one administrator said.

As another of the three pointed out, most active shooters begin their attacks by targeting a school resource officer, who's typically a police officer assigned to a school, nel to neutralize any threats.

By staying anonymous of surprise if there was a threat, they said.

John Cerna, a superindent of the Toppenish School District, who is one of 18 district administrators who carry concealed firearms as a safeguard against potential safety threats, is photographed with his Desert Eagle 9mm semi-automatic pistol in his office in Toppenish on Friday, April 1.

Not to say that people aren't curious. "I think some people suspect, but I don't think others know," said one of the administrators.

"Our spouses know," another

Asked if they were uncomfortable carrying a gun just feet they said it was "awkward" at first. Not so anymore.

"It's very routine," Cerna said. "Nothing out of the ordinary."

All four said they never envisioned carrying weapons when they were beginning their education careers, but student and staff safety requires it now.

Hardcore Training

Development of the firearms policy took 18 months. The process of volunteers getting and carrying guns didn't happen overnight, either.

Each of the 18 administrators underwent and regularly go through extensive firearms training. Cerna said the training is equivalent to that of a law enforcement official.

Initial training was 40 hours of combined classroom instruction and firing range training. Classroom instruction includes firearm use, gun maintenance and psychology of a shooter.

Cerna and the other administrators said training is much more than just the initial 40 hours, as Jon Ladines of security company Force Dynamics Defense Systems regularly checks up on their skills. The administrators undergo a full day of training every quarter. Every year, Ladines recertifies — and fails, if he has to — the volunteers.

'It runs with what law enforcement does," said Ladines, or other school security person- a former law enforcement officer with more than a decade of experience. "In fact, they may dines said, but that doesn't mean they don't get evaluated. Ladines and the school district can determine if someone is unfit or unable to meet the challenge.

Cerna said one volunteer did not pass the screening.

"I don't want someone to volfrom students and colleagues, unteer to just volunteer," he said. "This is serious."

Toppenish allows only administrators to carry guns under its current firearms policy. Teachers cannot volunteer and there are no plans to include them, Cerna said.

However, Ladines and Force Dynamics do provide other defense training to all noncarrying staff, including teachers. As a result, each classroom has a baseball bat and pepper spray.

Toppenish Not Alone

The main goal of Toppenish's firearms policy is to provide a first line of defense against potential threats. In-school security, whether a resource officer or a gun-wielding educator, it provides near-immediate protection while law enforcement responds to the emergency. Smaller rural school districts like Toppenish could be more vulnerable in an emergency because police may be farther away and police forces are

But is arming educators a sensible solution? Several other nearby districts think so, and are exploring options.

Statewide figures on how many school districts allow staff to carry concealed weapons were not available. State Superintendent Randy Dorn said his office does not keep track of the number of districts having adopted gun policies such as Toppenish's.

But after the Toppenish psychological evaluation, La-similar measure a year later.

La Salle High School, a private Roman Catholic school in Union Gap, has expressed interest in firearms training for some of its staff, with a possible decision by its board of directors coming this month. The Union Gap City Council has said its police department can provide training if La Salle approves such a policy.

Granger School District officials also have confirmed they are in the early stages of debating having armed staff in its schools.

Cerna said he's also fielded inquiries from districts near White Pass, the Tri-Cities area, the Spokane area, as far away as Alaska and even the East Coast. Cerna said he anticipated plenty of negative feedback after the policy's approval, but community support has been overwhelmingly positive, he said.

'We've had people want to volunteer," he said, adding that he tells them no.

Not All Are on Board

Steve Myers, superintendent of Educational Service District 105 and a former Toppenish district superintendent, is one of the policy's critics. He says he understands school districts that want to protect students and teachers, but he has concerns. One question he has is how educators would react in a real assault. "There's a possibility of panic and mistakes," he said. "I understand they want to protect their kids and staff ... schools are indeed soft targets."

Myers said, "The ESD Safety Co-op is not endorsing by any means or providing training for school personnel on firearms."

Some national organizations devoted to school security also do not support armed staff. In the immediate wake of the Sandy Hook, Conn., school shooting in 2012, the National Association of School Resource Officers and the National School Safety and Security Services released statements saying security should be left to resource officers and other law enforcement officers.

The two groups stand by their statements.

"Educators trained their whole careers to teach, and then you take them into (school secu- it," said Cerna, referring to his other than Cerna — Toppen- get more training than some of school board approved its policy, rity), it's something they're not conference room. Toppenish and Naches Valley officials are among those who have argued a resource officer is more expensive than equipping staff with guns. Canady said a good estimate as to how much a school resource officer costs is $60,000 to $100,000 a year. In contrast, the Toppenish training cost $4,500 for all of the volunteers, and they must supply their own weapons. Annual recertification costs an additional $1,500, and the district provides a stipend for ammunition for practice, Cerna added.

Kenneth Trump, president of the National School Safety and Security Services, called the arming of school staff a "high-risk proposition" that isn't justified by a smaller school budget.

If school districts want to prioritize security, Trump said, school boards and administrators can "dictate priorities" through their budgets. Other concerns include liability risk, insurance costs and potential miscommunication between responding police officers and armed staff in an active shooter incident.

When law enforcement enters, they won't know who the bad guy is," Trump said. Toppenish uses bulletproof vests and orange reflector vests for identification, but both Trump and Canady argued that identification method isn't foolproof.

Prior to its adoption two years ago, Cerna and Toppenish Police Chief Adam Diaz discussed how to craft the policy, and the chief said something similar about making sure emergency responders knew "who's who." Diaz could not be reached Wednesday for comment on this story.

Watching Sandy Hook

Cerna remains a strong advocate of the policy. A Seattle educator called to voice her disapproval shortly after the policy's approval. His response? He called her a "tree-hugger."

"She was offended by it," he said. "I don't care. 'You got kids in school, right? Are they protected?'

All that matters to Cerna is how he and others felt watching the aftermath of the Sandy Hook tragedy. Twenty-six people died in the school, including 20 children 6 and 7 years old.

With only two resource officers in Toppenish schools at the time - neither of whom patrolled an elementary school Cerna said the shooting made him realize his schools were not entirely secure and safe.

"I sat right here watching vulnerable. The mentality of people today, it's changed."

Tumwater Accepts Donation of Historic Brewhouse

IT'S OFFICIAL: The Historic Brewhouse on the Deschutes River Will Belong to the People of Tumwater

By Andy Hobbs

The Olympian

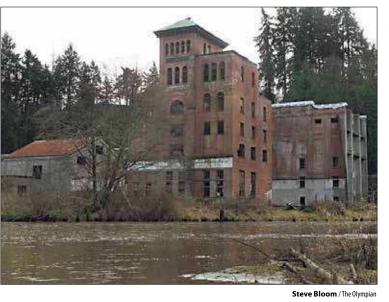

With the Tumwater City Council's approval Tuesday, Mayor Pete Kmet will authorize a letter of agreement with property owner Falls Development LLC to have the iconic building donated to the city. Kmet said the owner still needs to write the deed.

The deal shifts responsibility to the city for protecting and restoring the 111-year-old brewhouse. The brick building served as the original Olympia Brewery until 1916, and was added to the National Register of Historic Places in 1978.

Under the agreement, the city will own the building and the land beneath it within a perimeter of 12 feet. The city also will acquire trail easements to provide public access to the site and eventually connect it with the county's trail system.

Most people at Tuesday's public hearing on the donation supported the acquisition as a way to honor the area's heritage. Others were concerned about the financial risks and the impact of future development on the area's Tumwater's strategy will rely on a funding campaign for tax credits, grants, donations and partnerships.

The cost to remodel and preserve the aging structure is estimated at $5.6 million, according to a 2015 study. Construction would include a new roof and reinforced walls that can withstand seismic activity.

For a short-term fix, the study recommended a temporary roof and window coverings that would protect the brewhouse from further weather damage. That temporary step comes with an estimated price tag of $425,000, according to James Cary of Cardinal Architecture, which participated in the 2015 study.

To more accurately determine the brewhouse's structural soundness, Cary suggested the city find out whether the unreinforced masonry building stands on solid basalt or a softer soil. Cary also noted that all estimates reflect construction costs and do not factor in additional expenses, such as permits, legal fees and project management.

the donation will put the city in a better position to receive grants for historic preservation.

Councilman Tom Oliva said

"It would be an oversight not to take advantage of the offer

active now

"The old brewhouse is for we have now," said Oliva, who stressed that the city must avoid "demolition by neglect" with the brewhouse.

Councilwoman Joan Cathey abstained from voting on the letter of agreement. She supports the brewhouse's preservation, but is concerned about the lack of money available to do so. 'We're taking a big leap here,' she said. "I'm not against it. I'm just not comfortable voting for it.'

Councilman Ed Hildreth was absent from Tuesday's meeting. Kmet relayed that Hildreth would have voted against the donation because he doesn't think the building should be a public investment.

Kmet acknowledged that the donation comes with its share of risks, but he urged the council to find the courage to vote yes. He said he regrets a missed opportunity about 20 years ago to get the brewhouse under public control.

'We've taken an important step tonight," Kmet said after the vote Tuesday. Tumwater has a grand vision to create a craft brewing and distillery center that turns the area into an economic hub and job generator — and capitalizes on one of the state's hottest industries.

On that note, the city council will review a planned action ordinance for the brewery district at 7 p.m. April 19 at City Hall. The ordinance identifies all the regulations for the brewery properties on the north side of Custer Way and clarifies what a developer can build. The goal is to provide incentive for development in the area.

In the Sneeze Zone: High-Pollen Counts on Sunny Days Hit Allergy Sufferers Hard

City Council Votes to Drop Voting Rights Appeal

YAKIMA (AP) — The Yakima City Council has voted to end a four-year fight over how the city elects its leaders, dropping its appeal of a voting rights lawsuit with the American Civil Liberties Union. In a 6-0 vote, with one member absent, the City Council on Tuesday withdrew its appeal to the U.S. 9th Circuit Court of Appeals. That ended a case that the council has spent more than $1.1 million defending. The Yakima Herald-Republic reported the city must now pay the ACLU $1.8 million as part of a federal court order.

"This is a $3 million reminder" that all residents should have a say in who represents them, Mayor Avina Gutierrez said.

The lawsuit resulted in a federal judge ruling that Yakima's city council elections should be held by district last year, including two majority Latino districts on the city's east side. No Latino had ever been elected to the council prior to those elections, but three Latino candidates won their districts in 2015.

Yakima has about 90,000 residents and the population is nearly half Latino.

The former City Council last year appealed the judge's ruling in hopes that a U.S. Supreme Court redistricting case out of Texas would support the city's arguments. But on Monday, the Supreme Court unanimously rejected the Texas case and took away what legal footing the city had left to argue.

There was little discussion but a lot of smiles — before each council member voted to end the appeal. Councilman Bill Lover said it's important the city use Tuesday's vote as a route to a better future.

www.longviewradiology.com 910 S. Scheuber Rd., Centralia, WA 98531

"Our actions will set positive trends that will be enjoyed by future council members and citizens," Lover told the council. The city did agree to a settlement with the ACLU in which about $10,000 in interest accrued on the $1.8 million court order will be waived, as well as additional attorney fees and costs accrued by the plaintiffs in the 10 months since that court order came last June. The ACLU will also donate $100,000 back to the city for programs "to promote equity and equal opportunity for the residents of Yakima," Senior Assistant City Attorney Helen Harvey said.

. Yakima resident Nick Marquez, who previously helped organize rallies opposing the city's legal fight, called it "a joyous occasion."

"We shouldn't have had to fight this hard, but fairness is never given by asking," Marquez said. "Fairness has always been a fight."

Personnel from JNET, which is made up of officers from the Sheriff's Office and the Centralia and Chehalis police departments, saw Aguirre at the residence.

"He ends up leaving the residence and JNET personnel and the task force end up attempting to block him in," Breen said.

Just after 10:30 a.m., Aguirre allegedly rammed a local law enforcement vehicle and a U.S. Marshals vehicle with his own in an effort to flee the area.

Winlock's Rachel Archer to Wrestle in Olympic Trials

Winlock's Rachel Archer will wrestle in the U.S. Olympic Team Wrestling Trials this weekend.

BIG STAGE: Oklahoma City University Junior Competing in Iowa City This Weekend

By Matt Baide

mbaide@chronline.com

Many athletes dream of competing in the Olympics, the world's biggest stage, hoping to stand on the podium with their country's anthem playing in the background.

For Winlock's Rachel Archer,

the dream of competing in the Olympics is within reach. Archer will compete at the U.S. Olympic Team Wrestling Trials this Saturday and Sunday in Iowa City.

Archer finished second in the Women's Wrestling University Nationals to earn a spot in the Olympic trials.

She started wrestling in first grade, waiting for her dad to finish youth practices before she got a chance to wrestle.

"When I was younger, I wanted to do everything my brother did," Archer said. "I started to try to practice with the boys and tried to wrestle. My dad didn't like the idea of it; he said 'Girls don't wrestle', which made me want to wrestle even more."

Eventually, Archer convinced her dad to let her start wrestling. She competed, and won, against the boys with her dad as her youth coach.

Archer wrestled at Winlock High School, earning three straight state championships, winning the 106-pound title as a junior and senior and taking the 103-pound championship as a sophomore. Archer's high school coach, Pat Jones, helped her development as a wrestler throughout her high school

"He was really technical," Archer said. "He trained us hard, tough as nails, in really good shape."

She wrestled year round during high school. She didn't consider wrestling in college until her senior year, and finally decided to take a scholarship to join the wrestling

College Update: Shirer Standing Out for WSU

By The Chronicle

There's lots of local athletes competing in college sports at the four-year level. Here's a quick look at how some of them are faring this spring.

Baseball

DUGAN SHIRER, a redshirt sophomore from W.F. West, went 1 for 2 and scored a run for Washington State University on Sunday in an 18-3 loss to Arizona State Pullman. Shirer is hitting .327 and has started 17 games for the 9-16 Cougars, which is third on the team among players with at least 15 starts. He also leads the team with 12 walks, and has stolen seven bases.

MICHAEL FORGIONE, a junior from W.F. West High School, went 2 for 4 with a walk on Saturday for the University of Portland in a 5-3 loss to Brigham Young University. Forgione, who played two seasons at Lower Columbia College, has started all 28 games for the 13-15 Pilots, and is hitting .235 with 13 RBIs and a .920 fielding percentage at shortstop. He also leads the West Coast Conference with 14 stolen bases.

JOHN POMEROY, a junior from Mossyrock, got the final out for Oregon State in a 5-0 loss to California on March 26, facing one batter and getting a groundball out to end the game. Pomeroy has made five appearances for the 19-7 Beavers, with a 6.75 ERA and three strikeouts in 2 3/3 innings of work.

Senior-Led Beavers Off to a 7-1 Start

By Lars Steier

lsteier@chronline.com

A second-year coach and five starting seniors have given Tenino softball a new direction in 2016, and the results speak for themselves.

The Beavers are 7-1 on the year, with their lone loss to coming to Aberdeen at home, 8-3, on March 31, just before the beginning of spring break.

Despite the loss, it's the best start in years for Tenino, which has not qualified for the state tournament in more than ten years. Tenino's last state tournament berth was in 2004. The Beavers' only other state qualification was in 2002, when they placed sixth.

"They want it so bad this season - our goal is to go to state," coach KaTrina Haupert said. "Last year it was to get to districts and we did that. And then this year it's to go to state, and so we're practicing and we're playing like we're going."

Sixers General Manager Sam Hinkie Resigns

PHILADELPHIA

(TNS)—"The Process" is

76ers general manager Sam Hinkie stepped down from his post Wednesday

"While we are disappointed in Sam's decision, we would like to sincerely thank him for his contributions over the past three seasons," Sixers managing general partner Josh Harris said in a statement. "There is no question that Sam's work has put us in a very strong position to take advantage of numerous opportunities for an exciting future."

Citing sources, Yahoo Sports reported that Bryan Colangelo would succeed Hinkie as GM. A league source confirmed that report Wednesday night.

Several phone calls and a text message to Hinkie were not immediately returned. Jerry Colangelo, the Sixers' chairman of basketball operations and the father of Bryan, declined to comment.

ESPN reported that Hinkie gave up his post after changes in the organization emerged this week. According to several sources, he stepped down without notifying his Sixers employees.

"He did what he always does. No communication," one of the sources said.

But the resignation shouldn't come as a surprise. League executives have said that the December hiring of Jerry Colangelo as chairman of basketball operations was an admittance by the Sixers' ownership group that the process was not working. There was sense that the move meant that Hinkie would ultimately lose some of his power.

Seattle Mariners Robinson Cano (22) watches as his hit goes for a two-run home run during the ninth inning of a baseball game against the Texas Rangers Wednesday in Arlington, Texas.

Cano Homers Twice, Mariners Rally in 9th to Win 9-5 at Texas

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) Robinson Cano keeps going deep, and the Seattle Mariners are already starting to set a new tone in the AL West.

Cano homered two more cluding a two-run shot to cap a five-run ninth inning rally, and Seattle ended its three-game opening series with a 9-5 victory at defending division champion Texas on Wednesday.

"It was a good series. Not only because the way I ended up swinging the bat but the way we came back," Cano said. "Especially in that game and be able to win the series.'

Pinch-hitter Nori Aoki and No. 9 batter Ketel Marte started the rally with consecutive singles, and Leonys Martin had a tying RBI double. Kyle Seager then had a two-run single before Cano's fourth homer already this season chased Tolleson (0-1).

"Anytime you have success, especially early in the season, it ger said. "When you have su against another team's bullpen, that gives you confidence as well."

The Mariners scored eight runs over two innings Tuesday for a 10-2 victory.

The Rangers bullpen allowed 14 runs and 17 hits in only six innings the last two games of the series. Tolleson was the second Texas reliever in as many games to allow five runs without recording an out.

FIRST SERIES FOR SERVAIS

The Mariners won their first series with new manager Scott Servais. "We're pretty good. And we're starting to come together," he said. "The biggest thing is it's not one guy, it's not two guys. It's an entire group. It's a bullpen group. It's a starting group. It's a very deep lineup. It's bench guys."

NO WALKS

Miley struck out seven without a walk over six innings in his Mariners debut. He was acquired from Boston in an offseason trade.

"I've said it since the day I got the job, it's OK to show emotion once in a while," said Servais, who spent six years in player development with the Rangers. "Obviously, there were some things that went back and forth tonight, but that's part of the game."

The managers exchanged words after former Seattle reliever Tom Wilhelmsen hit Chris Iannetta with a pitch. Wilhelmsen, who was ejected, had just given up the second of two homers along with two doubles without getting an out in a six-run Seattle eighth.

Amazing Story: Rookie Makes History with Another HR

Denver! Here comes Trevor Sto-

The 23-year-old rookie made baseball history by becoming the first player to hit a home run in each of his first three big-league games and the Colorado Rockies beat the Arizona Diamondbacks 4-3 on Wednesday.

"It's just kind of surreal right now," he said. "It's hard to explain. I can't really put words to Story also is the first player in baseball history to hit a home run for each of his first four hits, according to information provided to the Rockies by the Elias Sports Bureau.

"It was fun to watch him," Rockies manager Walt Weiss said, "a young kid who has dreamt of this his whole life and shows up and is probably better than his dream was — that first game, that first series. ... It is quite a story — pun intended."

Next up for the slugging shortstop, Friday night's home opener against San Diego.

It was a big day for Tyler Chatwood, too.

The Rockies right-hander pitched a strong 6 1/3 innings in his first big-league appearance since recovering from a second Tommy John surgery. He said he wasn't able quite yet to step back and realize that yes, he'd made it.

"I think I'll be able to do that a little later," Chatwood said. 'Right now I've still got adrenalin going. But it was awesome."

Then he broke into a huge

"I'm sure he had this date circled on the calendar. "Weiss said. "He went out there and did an outstanding job. That's the Chatwood that we all remember. Goes out there and competes like a bulldog, great stuff, a really big day for him and for us."

Nick Ahmed homered off closer Jake McGee in the ninth to make it a one-run game, but McGee got the save.

Corbin (0-1) pitched seven innings, giving up four runs and eight hits. He struck out six, including Story twice after the home run. "I thought Patrick threw the ball well," Arizona manager

Chip Hale said. "It just seemed like every mistake we made in this series was a home run, not a hit but a home run. Unfortunately the mistakes he did make went out of the ballpark and today we weren't able to make up for it." Story also made a lunging grab of Paul Goldschmidt's sharp line drive in the fifth inning, one of several slick plays by the Rockies infield. The Rockies hit three home runs off Zack Greinke, four off

Shelby Miller and Corbin, overpowering what the Diamondbacks feel is a strong 1-2-3 start to the rotation. Story connected Corbin's third pitch of the game, sending it to deep left-center field, far over the 415-foot sign. Goldschmidt was hit by a son Day was lurking just out-rounds — are capable of making side Augusta National Golf Club, up a lot of ground here." wondering if he wanted to go in.

Day a Favorite at Masters, Where He Once Thought of Quitting

The game just wasn't fun

Even though he was set to MARINERS: Seattle gets a day play in his first Masters in 2011, do something else.

"Golf is a very, very frustrating game," Day recalled.

Whether he was really serious about quitting, no one will ever really know. Certainly, it's not a consideration these days.

As the 28-year-old Aussie prepares to tee off in the Masters for the sixth time Thursday, he's ranked No. 1 in the world and coming off his first major championship, one of the favorites along with defending champion Jordan Spieth and four-time major winner Rory McIlroy.

"I feel comfortable around this course," Day said. "I know it sets up well for me. It's a golf course where I can compete and play well and win."

Working against Day: the RBI single for his first hit with last top-ranked player to win at Augusta was Tiger Woods in Indeed, this might be the most wide-open Masters since the pre-Tiger days.

Spieth captured the first two majors of 2015 and nearly won the other two. McIlroy is missing only the Masters from a career Grand Slam. Day and 2013 Masters champion Adam Scott are both two-time winners on the PGA Tour this year. Two other Masters champs, Bubba Watson and Charl Schwartzel, also have victories in 2016. So does rising Japanese star Hideki Matsuyama, and let's not forget Phil Mickelson, a three-time Masters winner and hardly ready to fade away at age 45.

"There's a lot of guys who have a lot of success here that really brought some strong finishes and motivation and some momentum into this week," said Spieth, who tied for second in his Masters debut in 2014 before cruising to victory with an 18-under score a year ago. "I know that the people who are down maybe a few — three, four,

Coming off one of the greatest years in golf history, Spieth isn't even rated the favorite.

That would be Day.

"He can be the favorite," Spibefore its home opener Friday Day thought it might be time to eth said with a shrug. "We'll go ahead and just do our thing."

Day hardly felt like the man to beat before the Masters five years ago.

In fact, he had totally lost his love for the game.

"You have to perform, because if you don't perform, then you're off the tour," Day said. Then you start stressing about, 'OK, is there enough money up to get my card for next year.' And then you start losing a little bit of confidence. Then you start getting frustrated out there, and then you don't practice because you're frustrated with how you're playing, and it's a downward spiral from there." Right before the Masters, it almost came to a head during a meeting with his wife, his agent and his sports psychologist.

"I'm like, 'I just do not like the game right now. I'm just having a very, very hard time picking up the golf club to even just enjoy myself out there," Day said. "But we came to the conclusion of just going and saying, 'This might be my last Masters ever playing, I may as well enjoy it.'

"So," he added, with a smile, "I went out there and finished

So much for finding another line of work.

Day followed up with a thirdplace showing in 2013. Now, having romped to victory at last year's PGA Championship, he's rounded out golf's new Big Three with McIlroy and Spieth. McIlroy, who looked to be in a league of his own just two summers ago, is now chasing the others. That, of course, is a bit annoying for the 26-year-old from

Northern Ireland. "I'd be lying if I said those two guys having success doesn't motivate me," McIlroy said.

learned a lot," Haupert said. They do a lot more conditioning. This year has definitely changed, because if they don't listen they Haupert — a PE teacher at Tenino middle school and the Beavers' assistant coach, Hailey Pierce — a fourth grade teacher at Tenino elementary, have a history: the two played together competitively in seventh grade.

"As coaches, we've been more strict," Haupert said. "But at the same time, our coaching style has kind of loosened up to let them be leaders, because a lot of the girls have such good knowledge of the game.

This year we've really let them be individuals" Haupert added. "Hopefully we give them the ability to be the leaders that they should on the field."

Pitcher Morgan Masters, a two-time All-League pick, is one of five seniors — all of whom start — on the 10-player squad. Third baseman Molly Eckardt, first baseman Audrey Fant, shortstop/catcher Merissa Richardson and center fielder Jessica Schneider are also in their final year with the team.

"All of us were starters last year too," Masters said "The one common goal between us is to get to state, and we're really mentally focused toward that ... I think we're on track for that so far. I really think that we can make it if we just keep working."

Masters, who will compete for Pacific University in Forest Grove, Ore., next year, is "an awesome leader for this team," according to Haupert. The senior is hitting .542 with 11 RBIs this season, and has a 6-0 record with 35 strikeouts and seven walks — in the pitcher's circle.

"We want to make sure that we can impact (the younger athletes) so that they'll keep working hard even after we're gone," Masters explained. Haupert also credits Richardson, owner of a .556 batting average and 12 RBIs, with helping to guide the younger members of the squad.

"Marissa has really stepped up and been an amazing leader for this team, helping out not only her peers that are seniors, but really helping out the younger girls as well," Haupert said.

"We're lucky that we have such an old - well, I call them old - but an old infield because they know what they're doing," Pierce said. "They know what's up. But our outfield is still young, so we're still trying to get them into games."

Tenino, with a 4-1 record in the Evergreen 2A/1A League play, sit in third place behind the undefeated Montesano and 5-1 Rochester. The Beavers were picked to finish fourth in the league, according to The Chronicle's preseason coaches poll.

"This team practices and plays like a family," Haupert said. "They bicker like a family. They love each other like family. They get mad at each other like family. But they really have each other's backs, and I think that's the difference this season."

With the season's midpoint looming, fatigue doesn't seem to be setting in for the Beavers: the players have extended afterschool practices by up to an hour.

"These girls put the effort in... They don't want to stop (practice) and that's fantastic. It's so cool to see. They're putting the time in," Hauper said. "That shows how hard they've been working. It's paying off."

"They can't take themselves too seriously, and they do sometimes," Haupert said. "I really think that that can be a downfall for a team ... One of the most amazing parts about this sport is you can fail more than you succeed and you're an awesome softball player."

Following the loss to Aberdeen, in which Tenino trailed 5-0 after the first inning, Haupert told the team, "If you let your one failure dictate the way you play for the rest of the season or the rest of the game, you've already lost.""

But even with the recent success, and goal of a state tournament qualification Haupert has a broader target in mind for the Beavers.

"Our girls are working on being good winners, but I tell them they need to be great losers," Haupert said. "That's my motto. You've got to be a good winner, have great sportsmanship, but you have to be a great loser, and you have to learn from that. That's a really hard mentality to bring in to a sports program where we're new."

Tenino resumes its quest for a state tournament appearance on April 12, when the Beavers host Elma.

senior year before I decided I wanted to wrestle in college," Archer, 21 and a junior at OKCU, said. "I had the opportunity and I had scholarships offered to me and I knew if I didn't take those opportunities, they would never come again."

With all her success, she captured the eye of OKCU wrestling coach Archie Randall. OKCU is the No. 2-ranked wrestling program in the nation, according to USA Wrestling, and has been a national wrestling powerhouse for the last decade, earning a handful of team and individual national championships.

'She's a hard worker, she's pretty tenacious, she wrestles real hard, which is the style we wrestle," Randall said. "She's attacking all the time, so that's why we recruited her."

She had a 43-21 record during her freshman and sophomore seasons. The transition from high school to college wrestling was not easy. "In college, all the girls in college, they are their hometown star from wherever they are from, so everyone you wrestle is good," Archer said. "Everyone that you wrestle has credentials, they've won tournaments, they've won state titles, they have experience. Each year that you develop in college is huge. It's a whole new level of wrestling."

This season, Archer has won three tournaments. At University Nationals, Archer was trying to get into the top two to qualify for the Olympic trials. "I knew I had to wrestle through the bracket and win all my matches to get into the finals or I wasn't going to qualify," Ar-

She made it to the finals, losing 12-8 to Wayland Baptist University's Tarkyia Mensah. Randall said that it was the best tournament of the year for Archer.

"She should have won it," Randall said. "She lost in the finals and had a chance to win; she put the girl on her back twice. That was the best tournament she wrestled all year and that comes with experience and with confidence, and she develops confidence every time she wrestles. That's the most important thing, she's really confident when she wrestles."

Even though she wanted the championship, she knew she had qualified for the Olympic Trials — which had been something of a goal over the past few

"I've qualified for world team trials the past two years. This year is an Olympic year, so instead of world team trials, it's Olympic team trials," Archer said. "I really wanted to qualify for it. It's been in the back of my head all season, and I knew it was going to be a great experience if I was able to qualify; who knows if I would get to wrestle in it again. 'The next one is not for another four years. This was my prime opportunity to qualify to get to wrestle in a tournament like this," she added. While preparing for the biggest wrestling tournament of her career, Archer has had a busy week leading up to the trials this weekend, trying to balance her nursing school work with her wrestling preparation. It will not be an easy task for Archer to qualify for the Olympics, with 17 wrestlers in her weight class. The list of competitors at 116 pounds includes Helen Maroulis, the 2015 World Champion and the top ranked woman in qualifying, according to USA Wrestling.

"That's a world champion, how can you feel like you're not going to get better after you wrestle her?" Randall said. "All the experiences she's had to lead up to where she's at right now, have been important to her. She keeps raising the bar for herself every time that she competes which is the way it has to be if you want to be a champion." Archer has wrestled against

Maroulis once before, in the 2014 ASICS U.S. Open, losing

Others looking to qualify include 2015 World Team Member Whitney Conder and past U.S. World Team Members Jessica Medina and Deanna Betterman. The past experience against

Maroulis was a learning experience for Archer, and she won't be afraid on the mat, no matter who she ends up facing.

'Our coach likes to tell us that we are some of the best," Archer said. "It doesn't matter if we are wrestling the number one girl, we shouldn't go out there scared, we should go out there with confidence. I've trained and I'm good, and I can be competitive with this girl."

A U.S. female wrestler has never placed in the 55 kg weight class at the Olympics, with Saori Yoshida claiming gold all three years of the event and will look to earn a fourth gold in Rio. Canada's Tonya Lynn Verbeek has claimed the silver medal twice and a bronze medal.

Archer won't be the only OKCU wrestler at the Olympic Trials, as six other OKCU wrestlers, and five alumni, will be competing at the trails this weekend.

"I wouldn't want to do this by myself, it makes it more fun when you have your other teammates going with you," Archer said.

Her parents will be in attendance at the Trials, and Archer wants to compete her best and have a little fun.

"She's not going to change her style of wrestling; she's going to wrestle hard like she always does, she's going to compete well," Randall said. "She gets a good draw, she's going to get a good shot. The most important thing is she's getting an opportunity to wrestle in front of 16,000 people. That's huge, it's going to be the best experience she's ever had in her wrestling career."

"My goal for this weekend is to go out on the mat with confidence, not be scared to wrestle, be happy for the opportunity, wrestle my best and have fun," Archer said.

The Seattle Times When Jordan Morris was relegated to the Sounders' bench for Saturday's home match against Montreal, coach Sigi Schmid intimated that dropping the rookie forward out of the starting lineup was a short-term shift. And though that still might turn out to be the case, Schmid was evasive this week when asked if Morris will return to the starting 11 for Sunday's nationally televised match at Houston. 'We'll see," Schmid said Tuesday. "We'll see where we're at as a team. That's one of those 'gut feeling' things."

Morris played the final 33 minutes of the Impact match after coming on as a substitute for Aaron Kovar. After spending most of Seattle's first three matches looking increasingly uncomfortable out on the right wing, Morris lined up mostly as a central forward but was still unable to net his first MLS goal.

"I wanted Jordan to find his game and enjoy his game. There's been a lot of expectation that's been heaped upon him, not least of which from you guys," Schmid said to reporters. "Sometimes it's good to take a step back. If the front door is locked, you take a step back and look at the back door and make your way in that way.'

Morris also is still dealing with emotional fallout of the U.S. Under-23 team's failure to qualify for this summer's Olympics. "He's 100 percent healthy and 100 percent fit," Schmid said last > it's going to be tough for a while." Developing young players is an inexact science. For every DeAndre Yedlin — who both hit the ground running and made critical adjustments without taking a step back — there's a Kei Kamara. Schmid drafted Kamara for Columbus and later traded him to San Jose, only to watch from afar as the veteran forward finished as the runner-up for the 2015 MLS MVP award after rejoining the Crew years later.

Schmid did, however, likened Morris' ability to take constructive criticism to that of fellow young Sounder Cristian Roldan, who has further established himself as a regular in his second season in Seattle.

"If Roldan does something and there's an error, and you say something about it, you see that he adjusts that error out," Schmid said.

Morris, who almost always favors his stronger right foot, spent Tuesday's practice session using his left. He passed up firsttime shooting opportunities, instead cutting inside to take shots with his off foot.

You could see that he said to himself, 'OK, I've got to work on my left foot. I've got to get better,' Schmid said. "Those are the kids that make it. They're able to take that information in, they're able to apply it, and they're able to use it to develop."

Whether that process continues Sunday in Houston remains to be seen.

> Sabonis' decision, first reported by ESPN's Jeff Goodman, doesn't come as a surprise. The 6-foot-11 left-hander blossomed this season after a season-ending back injury to Przemek Karnowski. The Lithuanian native averaged 17.6 points, 11.8 rebounds and blocked a team-high 31 shots. He made 61 percent from the field, 77 percent at the free-throw line and knocked down 5 of 14 3-pointers. Gonzaga coach Mark Few didn't immediately return a phone message. Sabonis becomes the fifth Zag to leave school early, joining Paul Rogers (1997), Adam Morrison (2006), Austin Daye (2009) and Kelly Olynyk (2013). Morrison, Daye and Olynyk became first-round picks. Sabonis is projected to go between No. 12 and No. 20 in the June draft, according to ESPN.com's Chad Ford.

'Slowly scouts have overcome their concerns about his lack of elite athleticism and 3-point range and have instead focused on his toughness, elite rebounding, high basketball IQ and efficiency in the paint."

Gonzaga's frontcourt loses Sabonis and senior Kyle Wiltjer, who averaged 20.4 points, the highest by a Zag since Morrison's 28.1 in 2006.

Karnowski faces a lengthy recovery from back surgery but he's optimistic he'll be able to resume his career. The 7-foot-1 center, who is eligible for a medical redshirt, hasn't decided if he'll return to Gonzaga or pursue professional opportunities.

Missouri transfer Johnathan Williams is expected to be an impact player next season. The 6-9 junior led Missouri in scoring (11.9), rebounding (7.1) and blocks as a sophomore.

What many people don't know though is that moose are, literally, Washington's biggest game. Game managers estimate that at least 1,000 of the monster ungulates roam the vast expanse of eastern Washington. The hulking majority of those moose can be found in the greater-Spokane area, but they do range far and wide, making appearances from Walla Walla to Wenatchee.

It's funny that folks tend to forget Washington's mighty moose. For one thing, the Seattle Mariners have long employed the furry baseball fanatic as their official mascot. The Mariner Moose even drives a fourwheeler haphazardly around the field on special occasions. Once he even broke his leg while being towed behind the ATV. Another time he ran over an outfielder named Coco Crisp from the opposing team, so you know he is a born-and-bred, tried-and-true Washingtonian.

in moose though was perhaps the most recognizable star from the hit TV show, Northern Exposure. The program, which aired for six seasons, was set in the fictional town of Cicely, Alaska, but in reality was filmed in Roslyn, Washington, just north of Cle Elum. In the memorable opening credits from the show a moose is shown ambling about the sleepy streets of the former mining town.

The moose has become so popular in Roslyn — and beyond, with the help of beaming satellite connections and internet feeds — that the town holds a popular "Moosefest" celebration every summer where Northern Exposure fans from near and far come together for a round of nostalgic rumination.

Steve Ojurovich runs Cicely's Gift Shop in Roslyn and he knows the real story behind that world-famous moose. Ojurovich was around during Northern Exposure's heyday in Roslyn and even finagled his way into a recurring "featured extra" role on the series.

"That moose was stoned out of his mind," recalled Ojurovich with a laugh when telling the origin story of the memorable opening scene to the TV show. Ojurovich said that the orphaned moose, which was on loan from Washington State University, had been heavily medicated in order to facilitate its safe travel to the sleepy town. Once on the scene in Roslyn the ungainly ungulate was altogether uninterested in going for a sightseeing stroll of the town, so the film crew had to get creative. According to Ojurovich, the drug addled, sleepyeyed moose was led around town following a tried and true tactic:

The ol' banana-on-a-stick trick. That tasty tidbit was not the only surprising note from the opening credits of Northern Exposure though. Ojurovich

Wanting to extend a warm welcome, a large crowd gathered in the center of town and eagerly awaited the moose's

Not wanting to spook the moose, though, the film crew decided to wait out the sizable crowd in hopes of getting some low stress shots in the desolate city streets. Eventually, as the hours slipped by, the crowd began to dissipate as heavy heads and sleepy eyes longed for warm beds and soft pillows. Once the crowd was gone, Ojurovich says the director unleashed a torrent of sun-bright flood lights all over town in order to recreate the daytime ambiance for the open-

That scared the town half to death," said Ojurovich. "People were calling into work and apologizing for oversleeping. Nobody had any idea what was going on."

Unfortunately, Northern Exposure's world famous moose died in 1994 while back in the care of WSU. "They didn't know how to take care of an orphaned moose yet," said Ojurovich.

Like that opening scene of Northern Exposure, though, there is a bright side to this story. According to Ojurovich, the popular moose was able to procreate with a long-legged lady moose, presumably wowed by his Hollywood credentials, before departing this cold world. That means that there are likely offspring out there from Roslyn's moose, roaming somewhere in the wilderness between real Washington and fake Alaska. FISHIN'

Eager beaver anglers continue to patrol the waters of the lower Columbia River for spring Chinook and wayward winter steelhead and catch rates are finally, ever so incrementally, creeping up to match that effort.

The Washington Department of Fish and Wildlife statistics, which are current through April 3, show that so far this season anglers have made 67,306 trips to the river resulting in 6,872 spring Chinook and 463 steelhead harvested, as well as 1,122 springers and 387 steelhead caught and released. Those numbers are lagging slightly behind the preseason prediction that called for by April 9. Fishing for springers is currently open from Buoy 10 to Beacon Rock, as well as the river banks from Beacon Rock to Bonneville Dam. That fishery will remain open through Saturday, April 9. WDFW stats from the final three days of March showed that anglers on the lower Columbia made 10,330 trips, hooking 2,188 adult spring Chinook and 78 steelhead. Catch rates around around the lower Columbia were categorized at fair by the WDFW with the best bite occurring in the gorge and the estuary.

A hearing is scheduled for Thursday, April 7 for fishery managers to discuss the possibility of extended angling opportunities for sturgeon and salmonids on the lower Columbia this spring.

Sturgeon fishing was down in the dam pools last week. Weekly checking by the WDFW showed only one legal fish caught, with 40 sublegal fish released between skunked while 84 boat anglers caught 14 legal sturgeon, as well as 90 fish that were either too big or too small.

On the other fin, walleye fishing was "good to outstanding for boat anglers," last week according to a WDFW report. Anglers at The Dalles kept 143 walleye and released 29 more from 32 boats, while also averaging almost 5 bass per rod. In the John Day Pool 111 boats kept 401 walleye and released an additional 198 fish, while averaging more than 2.5 bass per rod.

Out on the Cowlitz River the piscatorial prospects really picked up the slack last week. The WDFW tallied 155 boat anglers with 132 steelhead harvested as well as 15 adult spring Chinook. Four steelhead were released. Along the shore, 153 anglers kept 20 steelhead and 18 springers. The steelhead were mostly pulled from near the trout hatchery while the Chinook salmon were caught all over the river.

Last week employees at the Cowlitz Salmon Hatchery separator collected 700 winter steelhead and 900 spring Chinook adults, as well as 27 springer jacks and one cutthroat trout. River flow at Mayfield Dam was recorded at about 6,820 cubic feet per second on Monday, April 4.

Sparse anglers on the Wind River have been going home mostly empty handed lately. The WDFW talked to just two boat anglers last week with grand total of zero fish between them. The river is currently open from Hwy. 14 upstream to 400 feet below Shipherd falls for hatchery spring Chinook and steelhead fishing. The river above Shipherd falls will open up on May 1.

Drano Lake had a similarly light effort last week with five anglers notching no catch. The river will be closed to fishing on Wednesday, April 13. From April 16 through June 30 only bank fishing will be allowed west More information on hunt- of the easternmost pillar of the Lowland trout season begins April 23, but there are plenty of happenings between now and then. Last week the WDFW planted Lacamas and Klineline pond with 4,000 and 1,000 rainbows respectively, while depositing 3,888 trout into Silver Lake.

Those fish in Klineline Pond will be put through the ringer soon for a two-day "Kids Fish-In". The pond will close on April 7 for preparations and then open up on April 8-9 for the youth fishing event. The pond will reopen to the public on April 10. Only registered youths will be allowed to participate in the kids fishing event. More than 2,500 youthful anglers are expected to turn out to try their luck.

HUNTIN'

Special permit black bear 9,100 adult springers on the hook hunts began in Washington on April 1st and youthful turkey hunters busted the brush last weekend during the two-day youth-only spring turkey opener. Next on the docket is the general spring turkey season which will run from April 15 - May 31.

On April 8-9 the Washington Fish and Wildlife Commission is slated to take action on a number of proposed changes to hunting rules for deer, elk, bear, cougar and other game.

The bulk of the proposals up for consideration deal with special permit levels and other issues that were not included in the 2015-17 hunting rules that were approved by the commission last April. However, the commission will also review a pair of rules that were addressed last year pertaining to cougar hunting seasons and the use of bait to hunt deer or elk.

The commission is comprised of citizens appointed by the governor in order to set policy for the WDFW. The meeting will take place in Room 172 of the 13 bank anglers and 15 boat an- Natural Resources Building in

CLAMMIN'

The WDFW has approved another round of clam digs along Washington's coastal beaches, including tides at Long Beach, Copalis and Mocrocks. Twin Harbors has yet to open since last spring's digs due to prevailing domoic acid levels.

"Razor clams at Twin Harbors had the highest levels of domoic acid during the peak of the harmful algae bloom in 2015,' said Dan Ayres, coastal shellfish manager for the WDFW, in a press release. "It is taking longer for clams there to rid themselves of the toxin."

It is unclear if Twin Harbors will open up in time for any of the remaining spring digs.

Beginning Thursday clam tides will switch from evening to mornings. The tides in Long Beach on April 9-10 coincide with the town's annual razor

The upcoming dig is scheduled on the following dates, beaches, and low tides:

- April 7, Thursday, 7:07 a.m.; 0.6 feet; Long Beach, Copalis,
- April 8, Friday, 7:54 a.m.; -1.1 feet; Long Beach, Copalis,
- April 9, Saturday, 8:42 a.m.; -1.3 feet; Long Beach, Copalis
- April 10, Sunday, 9:32 a.m.; -1.2 feet; Long Beach, Mocrocks
- April 11, Monday, 10:23
- a.m.; -0.9 feet; Long Beach • April 12, Tuesday, 11:19

a.m.; -0.4 feet; Long Beach

Ayres noted in a press release that all clam diggers 15 years or older must have a valid 2016-17 fishing license in order to harvest clams. Last year's licenses expired on April 1.

"After a late start to the season, we have tried to provide as much digging as possible while still conserving our razor clam populations," Ayres said.

By state law diggers may keep as many as 15 clams per day, but they must keep the first 15 they dig regardless of size or condition. No throwback for cracked shells or small bivalves! Each digger must also keep their clams in their own personal container.

Wildlife managers are also encouraging clam diggers to be cautious while out on the beach in order to limit the chances of disturbing the beach nesting shorebirds known as snowy plovers and streaked horned larks. All beachgoers should be sure to follow posted vehicle speed limits and avoid nesting sites by sticking to the wet, compact sand. Both species of birds are listed as endangered by the state and threatened by the federal Endangered Species Act. They also both nest in dry soft sand, especially near Leadbetter Point.

WHITE PASS — Fifteen years is a simply ridiculous amount of time to go without doing something I enjoy doing particularly when that thing is skiing and I'm an newspaper outdoors editor living and working barely an hour away from one of the state's most beautiful

But now, with those 15 years behind me, another 15 pounds in front of me (straining at my belt), and my age beginning with the number "6," had the idea of my skiing at all become, well, simply ridiculous?

I bet there's a few folks wondering that same thing about themselves. If you're one of them, hey, consider this my letter to

Nobody wants to be a klutz, to feel out of control, or to put aging bones at risk. So, when two years without skiing becomes four years, then six and 10, each ensuing year away from the slopes brings in more nagging uncertainty and doubt. Can you still do it? Should you even try?

In a nutshell, yes. Hey, if I can do it, anybody

Last week I got up to White Pass and ended that 15-year drought, and I can tell you this without reservation: I'm an idiot. Not because the wait made the return so difficult, but because the return was so much fun — and all of that nagging uncertainty turned out to be just wasted worry.

Getting back on skis isn't quite as easy as getting back onto a bicycle, but it's close - especially if the last time you skied was on those old straight skis. I was using those right up to the time I stopped skiing, largely because that's what I had in my garage and I didn't want to be renting skis when I already owned a

So I missed out entirely on the ski industry's transition to shaped" skis, the so-called parabolic skis that have been around since the mid-'90s. Having finally been on them for the first time, I can tell you unequivocally they're far easier to use, and far more forgiving, than what I learned on.

And a lot of older former skiers like myself are apparently figuring that out.

We're getting people skiing into their 70s, 80s and 90s now, whereas when I was a kid you'd see 65, 70 maybe at tops — and then maybe once or twice a year, not as active riding as they're doing now," says Matt Busby, White Pass Learning Center's assistant supervisor and the instructor of my one-hour lesson.

The parabolic skis are enabling that renaissance of older skiers, largely because you don't get nearly as tired using them. I used to wear out after three or four hours on the old straight skis; I'm a lot older now, and I was well into my fifth hour before those thigh muscles started to really burn.

"The biggest thing is about relaxation," Busby says. "I think the older generation was used to skiing so stiff and rigid, and having to do so much more power movement. Now it's much more about being fluid, being able to relax and ride all day."

And now is the best time of year to learn, or re-learn, how to ski. And I mean right now: a midweek day in springtime. It's supposed to be pretty sunny Wednesday through Friday, and this week is the last of the season for daily operation at White Pass. After that, the ski area will opened Saturdays and Sundays only through May 1. Going in midweek means there won't be nearly as many other skiers (and speedy snowboarders) out there, and that's a big consideration for shaky skiers. It's easy to get distracted or worried about crowded runs when you're making those wide,

Trail Running With Your Four-Legged Best Friend Sandsberry

By Jennifer Forker

The Associated Press

When Amanda Tichacek began running eight years ago, she found a friendly sidekick in Roxie, her 2-year-old greyhound mix. They started out slowly, but soon began running longer distances on the wooded trails near their home in Skokie, Illinois.

"We have grown together as runners," says Tichacek, who now logs 40 to 60 miles a week.

In her prime, Roxie ran nearmarathon distances, averaging more than 600 miles a year. Even at age 10, she still can run 6 or more miles with her owner.

For many runners, dogs offer companionship and fun. But while dogs clearly love to run, not all are built for long-distance running with people. Don't push your dog too hard, and stop if you see the dog lagging.

A VET'S ADVICE

Runners who want to share their love of the trail with a dog must consider the animal's age, breed and fitness, says Dr. Jeff Gerlesits, a veterinarian at Homeward Bound Animal Hospital in Arvada, Colorado. Start by getting the dog a checkup.

You want to make sure things are at a good starting point," says Gerlesits. A vet will check for respiratory, cardiovascular and orthopedic issues.

To keep Roxie in running shape, Tichacek keeps her hydrated and well-nourished, and watches for signs of stress.

"When she was younger she was all in and there weren't any issues," recalls Tichacek. "As she's gotten older, if she wants to stop, that's it. We're done. You have to do what's best for the dog."

AGE AND BREED

Never run with a dog younger than a year, says Gerlesits. Dogs, like humans, have growth plates that need to close before they can safely run beyond a playtime scamper.

Dog breeds reach skeletal maturity at different times, smaller dogs generally faster than larger breeds. "For a Labrador, that's about 12 months, but for a Great Dane, it's more like 18 months," says Gerlesits.

And not all breeds make ideal nning partners; for instance, those with squished faces — the technical term is brachycephalic — will have a more difficult time running distances because it's harder for them to breathe. Those include pugs, bulldogs and boxers.

Better runners include the says Gerlesits, who runs with an English setter. However, he doesn't rule out any breed completely.

In this March photo veterinarian Jeff Gerlesits runs with his dog, Dawson, an English setter, on a train in Arvada, Colo. While working and sporting breeds make the best runners, Dr. Gerlesits doesn't rule out any breed completely. "If we're aware of a dog's abilities and slowly work up from there, any dog has potential," he says.

TRAIL ETIQUETTE AND SAFETY

Tichacek always keeps Roxie leashed and by her side.

"On the single-track trails, you can't have a dog going nuts," she says. "I've run with friends whose dogs lacked that etiquette, and it's frustrating.'

Likewise, Gerlesits leashes his dog, Dawson. "It's in the best interest of your dog, other runners, other dogs and wildlife," he says.

Many local and state parks require that dogs be leashed, while most national parks exclude dogs from trails altogether. Check a park's rules before you visit, recommends Ranger Ken Low of the National Park Service.

Low works at the Santa Monica Mountains National Recreation Area, which has 500 miles of trails east of Los Angeles. Longer trails may cross several parklands, each with its own canine

'You need to do your advance homework and make sure dogs are allowed," he says. "It's always good to have a leash on you."

tentative turns, cross-crossing the entire width of the ski run to keep from going too fast and feeling out of control.

Plus, it's spring, so the roads are clear and the weather is much nicer than it was in January.

"Midway in the ski industry, you're always going to see relatively few people unless it's a holiday," says Katherine Goyette, White Pass' marketing director. 'So, again, if you can slip away during spring break" — which is this week for most Yakima Valley schools — "it's a great time to come up becauase you won't deal with any kinds of lines or crowds, (and) your lesson will have fewer people in it.

'(Spring) is such a great time to learn to ski because, really, it overcomes a lot of the obstacles. The first obstacle is just you don't need snow tires, the roads are perfectly clear, you can get up here in a flash from Yakima — at the one-hour mark, you're at the base of the mountain. And the weather is fabulous."

For last week's return to the slopes, I took advantage of one of White Pass' rental-and-lift-ticket packages, and paid for a one-hour lesson. I highly recommend both, and the single lesson was enough for me as a returning skier.

For first-timers trying to overcome a little personal uncertainty, I'd recommend White Pass' EZ Ride 123 program, because you get three days of instruction (plus lift tickets and rentals) as a reduced-pricing package deal. By the third day, most EZ Ride 123 students are skiing the area's easier intermediate runs.

And, thanks to the Paradise Basin expansion six years ago, there's a lot more intermediatelevel skiing available at White Pass than there used to be. The Paradise Basin terrain is essentially all intermediate terrain that more experienced skiers can turn into advanced by cutting between them through the trees.

I only skied at White Pass a couple of times those many years ago, but I remember thinking there just wasn't enough terrain for easy-to-intermediate skiers. There definitely is now.

"The whole idea behind building Paradise Basin was to offer intermediate skiing, which is our customer base," Goyette says "Probably 75 percent of our customers are intermediate skiers.

"So what this did was it opened up twice as much terrain for them to enjoy, and it doesn't force people who aren't comfortable with expert terrain into skiing expert terrain — and that's what our old mountain did. There's a lot of steep pitches in the original area. So now we can spread people out, let them be comfortable and let them enjoy skiing, no matter what their level is."

I got to enjoy a lot of those Paradise Basin runs last week after my one-hour lesson was over. My level of expertise was still sketchy; I was still too rigid too bent over, and not as relaxed as I should be. But I figure, hey, one hour of getting reacquainted with skis — and more technologically-advanced skis at that — allowed me to be skiing on intermediate runs.

After 15 years of accepting mental roadblocks, I'm a skier again. Ungainly, yes, and ungraceful. But - finally - un-

Mental roadblocks? Highly overrated. Overcoming them? Highly recommended.

Members of Connecticut celebrate after defeating Syracuse in the championship game at the women's Final Four in the NCAA college basketball tournament Tuesday in Indianapolis.

Four-Peat: UConn Beats 'Cuse for 4th Straight National Title

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) Breanna Stewart and UConn stand alone. Geno Auriemma, too, after another flawless season by the dominating Huskies.

UConn won an unprecedented fourth straight national championship Tuesday night, capping another perfect season by routing Syracuse 82-51. Until now, only the UCLA men's team had won four in a row in Division I, rolling to seven consecutive championships under John Wooden from 1967-73. With Tuesday's victory, Auriemma passed the Wizard of Westwood with his 11th national title.

Peerless again. Perfect again. "What those 11 championships mean to me is how many great players I've had the opportunity to coach," Auriemma said. "How many great people have come through the program. It doesn't matter whose name is above, or whose name I'm under. As long as I have those players in my memory, I'm good.

Stewart said when she came to campus four years ago that she wanted to win four titles. She delivered on that promise by scoring 24 points and grabbing 10 rebounds in the final game of her brilliant college career.

"It's unbelievable," Stewart said. "That was our goal coming in here once we were freshman and to carry it out and win like this as seniors is unbelievable."

Stewart and her fellow seniors Morgan Tuck and Moriah Jefferson posed on the ladder after cutting down the net for the final time. Mission accomplished.

"It wasn't a sense of relief, it was a sense of success. This is exactly what we wanted," Stewart said. "Going into every one of our national championship runs, we were confident and that's what we were tonight, confident. We made history and to be able to say that we did that with those two guys, we're going to remember that forever.'

The Huskies (38-0) have been nearly unbeatable since Stewart arrived. They lost four games her freshman year and only one since. The win over Syracuse was the 75th straight for UConn, all by double figures. Stewart and her fellow seniors went 24-0 in NCAA tourney games, too.

Stewart earned the most outstanding player of the Final Four all four years of her career. No other women's player has won it more than twice and only Lew Alcindor did it three times on the men's side.

the Year has said it is up to oth- things they did in the game. We ers to decide her place in women's college basketball lore. There is no denying she is the most accomplished player ever, winning I told our kids is you have no more titles than fellow UConn reason to be scared when you're greats Diana Taurasi and Maya prepared and we competed. We points to lead Syracuse.

Moore, who watched from the stands at Bankers Life Fieldhouse.

'I'll say this. She's the greatest NCAA Tournament player I've ever been around," Auriemma said. "When the lights were the brightest, that's (when) she was at her best."

Like the other great UConn instinct. The Huskies scored the first nine points of the game. Stewart had 10 points in the first 6 minutes as UConn built a 23-6 lead. When the Orange made a little run to cut its deficit to 25-13, Jefferson hit a 3-pointer just before the first-quarter buzzer. Stewart, Jefferson and Tuck, who have helped the Huskies to an NCAA-record 151 wins over their four years, combined for 26 of the 28 points in the period. They also handled the Orange's press with precision passing that led to easy layups. The Huskies were up 50-23 at the half and extended the lead to 33 early in third quarter before Syracuse scored 16 straight points to get within 60-43 with 2:02 left in the period that brought the Orange fans to their feet. Consecutive layups by Napheesa Collier restored the 20-plus point lead and UConn cruised from there.

"Not shocked by how good The three-time AP Player of they are, not shocked by the were definitely prepared for it," Syracuse coach Quentin Hillsman said. "One of the things didn't play scared."

Stewart, Tuck and Jefferson left the game for good with 1:46 left. They shared an embrace together before hugging Auriemma. The trio then went down the bench hugging every member of

"There's three key ingredients teams, this version had a killer that go into this kind of success, 'One, two, three," Auriemma said afterward, pointing to his three seniors.

Auriemma has never lost in 11 title appearances. While the names may change, the results are always the same: UConn is still there holding that trophy in the end. This one gave the Hall of Fame coach a sixth undefeated season.

To win her fourth championship, Stewart had to beat her hometown team. Fourth-seeded Syracuse (30-8) had the best season in school history, advancing to its first NCAA championship game. They hadn't made it out of the first weekend of the tournament until this year.

"I'm really happy for Breanna Stewart, who came to one of my camps. She's a great player," Hillsman said. "When you have a player that great coming from Syracuse, that doesn't happen that often."

These two teams hadn't played since the Orange left the Big East for the ACC after the 2013 season. Syracuse has now lost 24 straight against UConn, a skid that dates to 1996.

UNBEATENS

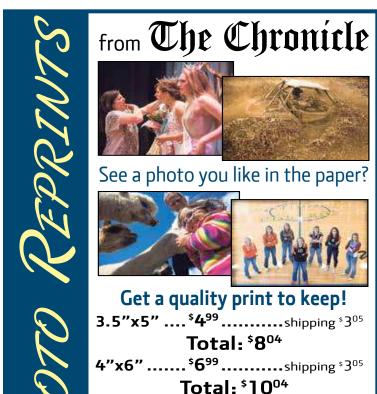

With Lubbock Christian and Thomas More finishing off their undefeated seasons Monday night in the Division II and III title games, this marks the third year that all three champions didn't have a loss. It also happened in 1995 and 2014 and UConn won the D-I titles those years, too.

DEATHTRAP: Evergreen Stages a Rollercoaster Thriller

By Carrina Stanton For The Chronicle

Following a successful run of a heartwarming family tale, the Evergreen Playhouse's next offering will be a bit more bone chilling.

"Deathtrap," which opens
Friday at the Centralia theater, will be a fun departure for a more mature audience. But one problem Director Amber Roal and her cast are having is that when you're presenting a show with so many twists and turns, how do you keep from spoilers?

"I've told all my friends and family 'I can't tell you much but you won't be disappointed," said Alex Johnson, who plays Clifford Anderson in the show.

Written by Ira Levin

Written by Ira Levin, who also wrote "Rosemary's Baby," "A Kiss Before Dying" and "The Stepford Wives," "Deathtrap" is a smart and quick-paced story in two acts revolving around five main characters. At the outset of the story ,Broadway thriller playwright Sidney Bruhl (played by Rich Garrett) and his wife Myra Bruhl (played by Michaela Hickey) are contemplating their financial affairs. Sidney's last hit was 18 ars ago and he has since had four flops and is stuck on what to write next. He supplements his income by occasionally teaching writing seminars, where he meets aspiring writer Clifford Anderson. Clifford sends Sidney a copy of his potential smash hit "Deathtrap" over which Sidney is tempted to use his extensive collection of weapons to end the young writer's life and take credit for the piece himself.

Roal said she was first exposed to "Deathtrap" as a movie when she was about 12 years old and remembered being very frightened by it. When she started look-ing into the show, she was pleased to discover that not only was it a play, but it was the longest running Broadway thriller of all time.

"It's not exactly a murder mystery but there's an element of 'what's going to hapmen and?" Parlacid pen next?" Roal said.

Along the storyline, moments of tension and violence are broken up by some comedic moments. Dutch psychic Helga ten Dorp (played by Reva Rice), who is staying in a cabin near the Bruhl home, occasionally drops in with her predictions of murder, mayhem and a few things that make no sense.

"There's enough comedy in it that it offsets the really intense parts," Garrett said. "It lets the audience off the hook just long enough to zing them. Just when you think it's the and "it's not the and" the end, it's not the end."

The cast is rounded out by the serious lawyer Porter MIlgrim (played by James Alviar) who serves to ask enough innocent questions to begin a series of actions that will lead to doom. Though the cast is small, Roal said they are all seasoned veterans who know how to round out a character and make it their own and work off each other to make even the smallest gesture important. Add that to the way Levin wrote the characters and you have a recipe for success, Garrett noted.

"They're all pretty despicable characters but you root for them," he said.

Due to some adult language and mild on-stage violence (including a small amount of blood) the twohour "Deathtrap" may not be suitable for the youngest audiences. But anyone who likes a true thriller will enjoy this play, Roal said. She likened the many twists and turns in the storyline of "Deathtrap" to some of the movies by M. Night Shyama-lan in that you're not likely to guess what's coming next.

"I think it's a play that if you're fortunate to see it twice you start to see the foreshadowing or what we call the Easter Eggs that become much clearer after you've seen it once through," Roal said.

400 Pears After His Death, Milliam Shakespeare Has Kept His Cool

By Neal Justin

Star Tribune (Minneapolis)

LOS ANGELES — To be or not to be Hamlet? Stupid question.

An actor passing on the opportunity to drill into the skull of the Great Dane — or dozens of other complicated characters from William Shakespeare's deep roster — is akin to a country singer turning down an invitation from the Grand Ole Opry.

Embrace the Bard, your name could eventually be in lights. Ignore him and spend the rest of your professional life waiting to audition behind Joey Tribbiani.

It's more than just brilliant prose. It's a workout," said actor/director Kenneth Branagh, 55, the most famous Shakespeare cheerleader of his generation. "It requires you to dance, sword-fight. It's not something you get bored with easily."

That sentiment comes as no surprise from a guy who was probably dissecting "The Merchant of Venice" while his schoolmates were figuring out the latest Hardy Boys mystery. But four centuries after the playwright went to the big stage in the sky, his work still resonates with performers of all ages and backgrounds — a passion that seeps into your pop culture diet whether you know it or not.

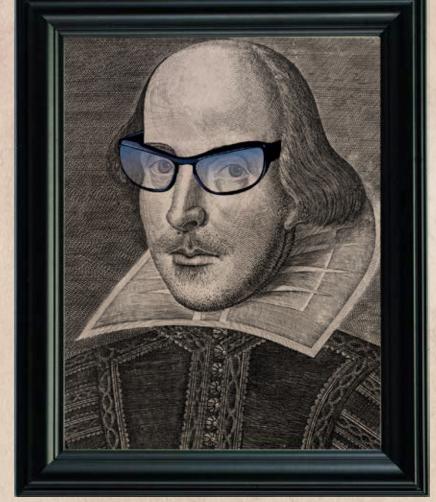

Take red-hot Benedict Cumberbatch. The actor breathed fire into "The Hobbit" trilogy and enraged Capt. Kirk in "Star Trek Into Darkness," only to follow up those big-budget splashes last year by playing Hamlet, the hottest ticket in the history of London theater.

Beloved movie star Tom Hanks, who got his big break playing the comic servant in a Cleveland production of "The Taming of the Shrew," pays his debt by helping inner-city kids in Los Angeles experience the Bard for free.

Recent Oscar winner Leonardo DiCaprio taught his fans that parting is such sweet sorrow in Baz Luhrmann's flashy 1996 film "Romeo + Juliet." Denzel Washington has twice put his movie career on pause to do "Julius Caesar" and "Richard III" in New York. CNN recently unearthed footage of a 14-year-old Jennifer Lawrence tackling Desdemona in a Louisville community theater's stab at "Othello."

"I would love, love, love to play Hamlet," said James Norton, who was plucked from the Cambridge student body for Trevor Nunn's production of "Cymbeline" nine years ago and is melting hearts as a jazz-loving vicar in PBS' "Grantchester." "But I'm already a bit too old."

The 30-year-old Norton may think the role has passed him by - although maturity didn't stop Mel Gibson from doing a 1990 film version at the creaky age of 34 — but there are plenty of other choices in his future.

One of the keys to Shakespeare's longevity is that his characters cover every demographic, from a teenage Juliet to a doddering King Lear.

'You get so used to doing Shakespeare, it becomes part of your life,' said Michael Gambon, who trod the boards at London's National Theatre, under the direction of Laurence Olivier, decades before replacing the late Richard Harris as Prof. Dumbledore in the "Harry Potter" movies. "That just continues as you grow older."

Gambon's latest role, as Winston Churchill in PBS' upcoming production of "Churchill's Secret," may not be from Shakespeare's canon. But the story of the former prime minister's attempt to recover from a debilitating stroke wouldn't seem out of place in one of the Bard's dramas as the seemingly invincible leader privately struggles to outlast the winter of his discontent.

'Shakespeare really loved audiences, and he just wanted stories that would connect," said Golden Globenominated actress Romola Garai ("Emma," "The Hour"), who recently wrapped up a critically acclaimed run in London of Shakespeare's "Measure for Measure." "He wasn't so interested in complicated ideas. These are elemental themes, and that's what stories should always be about."

Having Shakespeare on your resume will get the attention of casting directors, even when they're looking for someone to take on a caped cru-

"Shakespearean actors are perfect for the comic-book world," said TV producer Greg Berlanti, who often taps classically trained performers as villains for CBS' "Supergirl" and the CW's "The Flash." "They have the ability to make a scene feel real and heightened at the same time. That's why they're also ideal for Disney characters and other voice-over work.

Branagh's adventures with Shakespeare also came in handy behind the scenes in 2010 when preparing to direct the most highly anticipated project of his career.

"The spectacle and size of 'Thor' is not something you get intimidated by if you do a lot of Shakespeare, who used a lot of epic battles, monsters, magic, all of those," Branagh said. 'Some people may think the comicbook world is extravagant, but I don't get thrown by it."

But just because Shakespeare is good for you doesn't mean every actor comes willingly to the table.

Anthony Hopkins got his professional start as Olivier's understudy at the National Theatre. He divorced himself from live performances and the Bard's words decades ago, escaping to the U.S., where he made his mark as Hannibal Lecter in the 1991 movie "Silence of the Lambs." Hopkins did set aside his old grudge against Shakespeare to play the title character in the film adaptation of "Titus" in 1999, but he has only recently discovered a passion for the Bard.

He'll play an actor obsessed with "King Lear" in a TV version of the play "The Dresser," co-starring Ian McKellen and premiering on Starz May 30. Later this year he'll go all in, for a BBC production of "Lear" also featuring Keira Knightley, Naomi Watts and Gwyneth Paltrow.

"The Dresser' was a revisit to a world I had known 50 years ago and wasn't comfortable with," said Hopkins, who used to treat going on stage like a trip to the dentist. "I can now understand why Sir Ian and so many great actors love Shakespeare. I wish I had had that then."

A younger Hopkins may have benefited from classes taught by Doug Scholz-Carlson. In addition to serving as artistic director for Winona, Minn.'s, Great River Shakespeare Festival, Scholz-Carlson introduces high school students to the classics, demystifying the language by comparing it to the way they talk to one another in the cafeteria.

"I ask them, 'If you were to write that dialogue down and hand it to your parents, would they understand it? Probably not, but if they could see you act it out with your facial expressions, they probably would," he said. "In the same way, Shakespeare was making up his own language. Once kids get that, they get excited."

Branagh remembers being downright giddy the first time he experienced "Romeo and Juliet" - The angst! The love! The guns! - and then seeing a younger generation react the same way to DiCaprio's version during a Friday matinee in Boston.

"I must have been the only guy in a room full of 15-year-old girls who were going mad," he said.

PBS has done its part in spreading the gospel with "Shakespeare Uncov-ered," a sort of "Classics for Dummies," in which marquee names such as Ethan Hawke and Kim Cattrall take viewers by the hand and guide them through the iambic-pentameter minefields.

The series, which will air a third season at an unscheduled date, has triggered celebrations across the country, including Nashville residents paying tribute to "Romeo and Juliet" by assembling the largest "balcony scene" ever over a dried-up riverbed.

Once newcomers crack the code, they can begin to appreciate some of literature's richest heroes and villains who have stood the test of time.

Just ask McKellen, who has played all manner of fantasy figures, from Gandalf to Magneto — and imbued them with a Shakespearean thrust.

"Once you discover Shakespeare, he can be right at the center of your imagination," said McKellen. "Long may he continue to do just that."

AMBACAN ring Its 15 Seasons

The curtain is about to come down on "American Idol," Fox's phenomenal singing competition series that launched a genre of reality television shows devoted to singing and novice singers aspiring to be stars. After 15 seasons packed with performances both good and not-so-good, "American Idol" ends its run April 7.

In honor of the show's end, here are five of the most memorable performances to grace the 'Idol" stage. Many of them aren't from the show's winners or more popular alumni.

Kelly Clarkson – "A Natural Woman"

The original "Idol" is and always will be Kelly Clarkson, winner of the show's first season. Her soaring performance of Aretha Franklin's "(You Make Me Feel Like) A Natural Woman" is considered one of the series' most solid highlights and gave a hint of her eventual stardom.

Fantasia Barrino

"Summertime" True musical icons are known by one name only: Patti, Aretha, Beyonce and the winner of "Idol's" third season, Fantasia. The young singer impressed judges and audiences with her stirring rendition of the "Porgy and Bess" standard "Summertime" — sitting on the floor of the stage, shoes off. Judge Paula Abdul called it an "Oscar-winning performance" while fellow judge Simon Cowell, who was not easy to please, called it "magical."

Blake Lewis

— "You Give Love a Bad Name"

Blake Lewis of Season 6 put his own twist on the singing competition, injecting beatbox into his arrangement of Bon Jovi's "You Give Love a Bad Name." The move was considered by producers to be risky. Bon Jovi lead singer Jon Bon Jovi, who served as show mentor for the week, called it "rolling the dice." But given the crowd's reaction and his eventual second-place finish, the gamble paid off.

Candice Glover

— "Lovesong"

When musical legend and judge Mariah Carey dusts an artist with glitter, no greater seal of approval is needed. And the only "Idol" contestant to be bestowed with such an honor was Season 12's winner, Candice Glover. Her cover of the Cure's "Lovesong" earned a standing ovation from the judge's panel, the special recognition from Carey, and judge Randy Jackson's declaration that it was one of the best performances in his 12 years on the show.

Joshua Ledet "It's a Man's Man's Man's World"

Season 11's Joshua Ledet's powerful version of James Brown's "It's a Man's Man's Man's World" brought the arena to its feet. Of the performance, judge Steven Tyler said "neither man nor woman has ever sang that good with that much compassion on this show ever."

Pipeline blast kills worker

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (UPI) - Oil in the Alaska pipeline apparently spliled out through a malfunctioning valve and ignited, setting off an explosion that destroyed a key pumping station, killed a man and brought the flow of oil from Alaska's north slope to a half for the second time in five days, investigators reported to a reported today.

The explosion and resulting fire at

Pump Station No. 8 on the Alaska pipeline filled the sky with clouds of billowing smoke that could be seen in Fairbanks, 37 miles to the north. The Department of Transportation in Washington said a preliminary report from pipeline safety officials at the scene indicated the explosion resulted from a valve malfunction at the station.

Pipeline and government experts were to survey the damage and try to determine whether the pumping station could be bypassed and the oil flow resumed.

Transportation Secretary Brock Adams will make the final decision based on a recommendation by his Office of Pipeline Safety, Jewell said. If the proposal is rejected, he said, "the line will be shut down." He said, however, that "it appears"

Smoke billowed up from the pump building, above the underground pipeline, and could be seen in Fairpipeine, and could be seen in Fair-banks, 37 miles away. Some oil escaped and spilled in the pump station com-plex, cleared from a thick forest. Immediately after the explosion, at

Petition against gasoline tax succeeds in short campaign

OLYMPIA (UPI) - King County Assessor Harley Hoppe, mounting the shortest apparently successful initiative campaign in state history turned in 209,600 signatures by the midnight Friday deadline on petitions to place initiative 348 — a proposed rollback of the Legislature's two-cent increase in the state gasoline tax — on the November ballot.

Two other initiatives appeared to qualify for the ballot. Supporters of Initiative 335 — which would probibit display of obscene films and ban sale of pornographic literature — turned in 178,000 signatures. Backers of Initiative which would remove the state sales tax on food -- turned in 166,000 signatures.

The gas tax initiative was first circulated just six days ago, after a last-minute move by the Legislature to impose a variable state gas tax that will boost the current tax of nine cents a gallon to 11 cents on July 1.

A spokesman for a group supporting the anti-pornography initiative called their apparently successful campaign an example of a "new public con-sciousness" about hard-core pornography.

College youth from Missouri visits Washington on bicycle

By GORDON MacCRACKEN Chronicle Staff Writer Most people who start to think about taking a vacation halfway across the United States consider several modes of transportation-airplane, passenger of transportation—airpiane, passenger train, bus or automobile. Carey Ford, however, had a better idea. He rode his bicycle from Missouri to Chehalis. Ford, who lives in Mountain View Mo., is a junior in physical education and science at the School of the Ozarks in Point Lookout. Mo. A member of the school's track team, he was in good enough coordinate to make the twowheeled visit to the home of his brother. Scott, in Chehalis. I've really enjoyed everything."

said the muscular Ford as he reviewed his trip while preparing for a "short" jaunt-to the Pacific Ocean.

"You either meet the good side of people or the bad side of people." he commented, "and everybody's been real nice to me."

Ford and a college friend began to plan the trip a year ago. The friend, however, left school and joined the ser-vice, but Ford was determined to pedal west no matter what. As a bonus, he had the opportunity to visit his former schoolmate at the man's Colorado home while the friend was on leave.

Ford left home June 1, carried about 60 pounds of gear on his bike, and arrived in Washington July 1 after travel-ing in a total of 10 states. He reached Chehalis this week, and plans to visit his brother there, along with siblings in Tacoma, before returning to Missouri for college.

"I've stopped everywhere," said
Ford. He spent time in Dodge City and Garden City, Kan., Alamosa, Durango,
Mayfield., Silverton, Gunnison and Dinosaur National Monament, Colo. Artec, N.M. ("I loved their temple," b. said of the Indian ruins there) and many other stopping places.
One of Ford's favorite areas was Yellowstone National Park. "I really enjoyed it," he said, "but there were an enjoyed it," he sa awful lot of cars."

Ford said traffic didn't pose much of a problem, but there were other hazards. "You wouldn't believe all the dogs," he said. "I saw some real monsters."

monsters.
Other troubles included 40 mile per hour headwirds, passes ("Wolf Creek Pass seemed like it was the worst") and the possibility of bears near Yellowstone.
Fortunately, Ford experienced only one day of rain, and used the pup tent he carried only four nights. "I like sleep-ing under the stars the best," he said. He also noted that many people invited him in for a shower.

Once, he said, a Utah man whose family was at a rodeo told Ford be could make camp in the family's yard.

faced with some bostile Utahns until they became convinced he had ap-proval. "They had kill written all over proval. "They had 'kill' written all over their faces." said Ford.

One other problem for Ford came in Twin Bridges, Mont., where a family of skunks took it upon themselves to cross the road just as Ford approached on his two-wheeler. "I let them have the road," he quickly pointed out.
"It's little things that really make the trip worth-while," said Ford. "I'd see 40 or 50 antelope a day in some places, and I saw lots of little animals."
The loughiness of the trin, said Ford.

The loueliness of the trip, said Ford, didn't bother him much. "I've become real independent," he explained. "I don't like to impose on people. I missed companionship on long stretches, but not that much. I'd talk to the animals, all sorts of crazy stuff."

Ford, who sought sponsors along the way to raise money for a charity, said. "I just feel sorry for people who can't do it. I'm just glad I could help somebody. If people say I'm not capable, it just makes me want to do it.

Although Ford doesn't plan to ride Curly-haired, bespectacled biker wheel-home, he may take a side trip to California or British Columbia before traveling to Missouri. So, if you see a wave: it just may be Carey Ford, who saw America by bicycle.

ARTrails in Our Community

What is happening with ARTrails of Southwest Washington? A lot! Springtime is here and our artists are busy planning and sorting for the Community Garage Sale at the Southwest Washington Fair on Saturday April 16th from 9:00 a.m. to 4 p.m. at 2555 North National Avenue, Chehalis WA 98532. Come and find us in the Blue Pavilion for an excellent source of art supplies, original art, and other garage sale items.

The creation of our 4th Annual ARTrails Birds Nest is scheduled for Saturday April 30th in Borst Park from 10a.m. to 1 p.m.

Members of ARTrails, friends, and the community at large gather to construct a gigantic 30' x 4' "nest" in the area by the dog park. Participants are asked to gather the winter's fallen branches and sticks to weave and create this amazing structure while doing a big spring clean at the park. It is so much fun! Master Gardeners who have a garden in the park provide us with the clippings for 'the' ultimate look for any nest this spring.

Gardening clothes, hand pruners and sturdy shoes are recommended for this event. Hats, sunglasses and cameras are suggested. Writers, photographers and Plein-Air artists are welcomed!

Save these dates for the STUDIO TOUR: September 17-18 and 24-25 from 10 am-5 pm for this free, selfguided tour. The tour begins with a Gala Opening Reception, Friday, September 16 (4-8 pm), in downtown Centralia's Historic Train Depot (210 Railway Avenue, Centralia 98531). The Exhibition Gallery at the Historic Train Depot in Centralia (open September 17 – 25th) serves as the ARTrails Gallery and starting point for the tour. Like us on Facebook: AR-Trails of Southwest Washington.

Do You Know ALICE?

The term ALICE - Asset Limited, Income Constrained, Employed represents a population of households in our community who don't earn enough to afford basic necessities. The United Way ALICE Project provides a framework, language, and tools to measure and understand the struggles people are facing every day. ALICE households include women and men, young and old, urban and rural, and of all races and ethnicities. ALICE is the cashiers, auto mechanics and day care teachers we see every day - workers who keep our local economy, and our families' lives running, but who aren't always sure they can put food on their own tables. ALICE's struggles affect not just ALICE individuals and households, but our whole community. In Lewis County, 18% of residents live below the poverty threshold, but an additional 26% live just above the poverty threshold and are unable to consistently afford the basic necessities. Often ALICE is one unexpected setback away from sliding into poverty. The difference between making it or not, each month, can come down to simple things such as a car repair or a doctor's visit. United Way of Lewis County is working to break the cycle of intergenerational poverty and provide opportunities for a good life for all. To view the full ALICE report for the Pacific Northwest, visit unitedwayalice.org/PNW.

JOB FAIR

The 24th annual JOB FAIR will take place in the Centralia College Health and Wellness Bldg. (gym) on Thursday, April 28th from 10am-1pm. This event is free and open to the community. Over 55 local and regional employers will be in attendance to assist individuals seeking part time, full time, or seasonal jobs, as well as those interested in changing jobs or exploring a potential new career. Participating employers include state and county agencies, private and non profit businesses, municipalities, apprenticeships and more. Recruiters will be representing a wide variety of fields, such as business, law enforcement, education, healthcare, retail and more! Our Job Fair employer representatives are continually reinforcing that it's extremely important to dress professionally when you attend a Job Fair. Remove all visible piercings that are unusual and cover tattoos. Make arrangements for childcare. It's most effective to greet each employer with a firm handshake, good eye contact and a smile. Be prepared to ask a couple of basic questions about the place of employment. Space will be provided for job seekers to complete applications, if necessary. This is an excellent time to seek current job openings or gather information about a potential career, including skills, types of training and academic requirements. Jones takes the express route to laughter

By George Dickie

'e've all taken them, the neverending car trip in which Dad refuses to stop and ask directions, the kids are bored beyond belief and Grandpa keeps puffing away on those smelly cigars.

The family road trip is a pheomenon as American as apple pie, so leave it to Canadians, spouses and former "The Daily Show" regulars Jason Jones and Samantha Bee to bring it to television in a sitcom premiering this week on TBS.

"The Detour," debuting Monday, April 11, stars Jones and Natalie Zea ("Justified," "Californication") as Nate and Robin Parker, who with their preteen children Delilah (Ashley Geramsimovich, "Louie") and Jared (Liam Carroll, "The Neighbors") hit the road in their temperamental minivan Blue Thunder from their home in Syracuse, N.Y., for vacation in Fort Lauderdale, Fla.

Naturally, every step of the way is fraught with trouble as the Parkers contend with aggressive drivers, well-meaning truckers, local cops, food poisoning, dodgy hotel rooms and mishaps of all stripes.

Jones, who is also executive producer (with Bee), showrunner, writer and even director of one episode, based the half-hour series on his own experiences. "Originally, it was trips I took with my family from Canada to Florida," the 42-year-old native of Hamilton, Ontario, says. "We'd go down there all the time. The I-95 corridor, I knew it very well. But I think more than the trip itself, I wanted a reflection of an honest family relationship. You know, so often in sitcom TV on network television, all you see is this glossy, infantilized version of a family that talks down to the audience and I didn't want that. I wanted a real relationship."

The family dynamic is evident from the opening episode as Nate and Robin argue over whether they should have flown, try to give the kids an innocentsounding explanation for an adult-themed truck stop called the Banana Creamery, and put Jared behind the wheel to help push-start Blue Thunder after its starter motor acted up - a scene inspired by a page from the Jones/Bee family history.

The kids are an integral part of the action here and not just in an adult-things-out-of-littlemouths way. Both young actors are capable of improv and Jones is certainly receptive to it - but only to a degree.

"Ashley says (stuff) and you go, 'Oh, I didn't expect that to come out of your mouth," he says. "So what she said would make me laugh but I'm very much about the right timing and the flow and the rhythm of the scene. And I would then rewrite it for that line to be the punch line and then we would sort of work up to it and button it with that. And you know, to give a punch line to a child when you're a 10-year veteran of a comedy show, (you're saying),

'I trust you.'

After a decade as a correspondent on "The Daily Show With Jon Stewart," Jones is relishing the chance to tell his own stories in "The Detour." He calls his job as showrunner "the best position ever," but allows that should other opportunities arise, he'd be receptive.

"I love storytelling," he says.

"That's my goal, is just to tell fun stories and I fit a lot of them into this show. You know, I've fit almost a lifetime of stories into this show and it will continue to draw upon my experience. But there comes other stories where you go, 'Oh, that doesn't fit. That's a great movie idea and I'd love to be able to do that some time.'

ADVICE: Dear Abby

Visiting Relatives Could Pay Dearly for Generous Hospitality

DEAR ABBY: I'm wondering how to approach a situation following a visit with some relatives. We enjoyed a wonderful visit and they were very nice to put us up in their guest room. A few days into our stay, I woke up with strange and very itchy

By Abigail Van Buren

bites on my legs and shoulders. When I mentioned it to our host, she quickly supplied me with some itch cream and changed the subject.

After we returned home, we met a few of our relatives and they mentioned that this particular household was experiencing a bed bug problem. I was shocked and a little hurt that they didn't mention the infestation or warn us ahead of time.

We're in the process of making sure we didn't bring any of these critters home, but if we must hire an exterminator or replace furniture, we will be in a bind financially. What would be the proper way to address this, and should our host feel some responsibility for what costs we may have to incur? - ITCHY AND IRRITATED IN ILLI-NOIS

DEAR ITCHY: That these relatives would knowingly allow you to stay in a room they knew was infested with "critters" is appalling. Could they have been too embarrassed to speak up?

If you must replace rugs, mattresses, bedding, etc., ask them to reimburse you. If they refuse, you could take them to small claims court and get a judgment IF you could prove you picked the bugs up there. But first you should let your relatives know that other family members told you about their "sin of omission." In the future, if you plan to visit this couple again, stay elsewhere. Once bitten, twice shy.

DEAR ABBY: I have been married to "George" for 20 years. We have a solid relationship except for one thing that drives me crazy: He insists on having his ex-wife cut his hair.

I have told him over and over that I really dislike it and I wish he would go elsewhere, but he refuses. Now he's going behind my back and waiting for me to notice that he's had a haircut. He used to at least tell me beforehand. It would take an entire column to describe her past behavior, but it's not all that different from many exes.

I think what he's doing is disrespectful to me. I would never continue doing something he asked me not to if it bothered him. There are a lot of hairstylists in this town, and her haircuts aren't that great. Am I being unreasonable? — BOTHERED IN IDAHO

DEAR BOTHERED: Your husband has been doing this for 20 years and you are only writing to me about it now? Because it bothers you, the next time he goes over to get his hair cut, volunteer to go with him. If you can't beat 'em, join 'em — and maybe get a manicure in the process.
