Attorney for Man Accused of 1985 Double-Murder Says His Client Will Testify in His Own Defense

By Stephanie Schendel
sschendel@chronline.com

The Alaska man accused of murdering an elderly Ethel couple in 1985 will testify in his own defense at trial, his attorney said Tuesday.

John Crowley, the Seattle-based lawyer representing Rick Riffe, made the comments shortly after Riffe appeared in Lewis County Superior Court Tuesday afternoon for his first court appearance since he was extradited from Alaska last week.

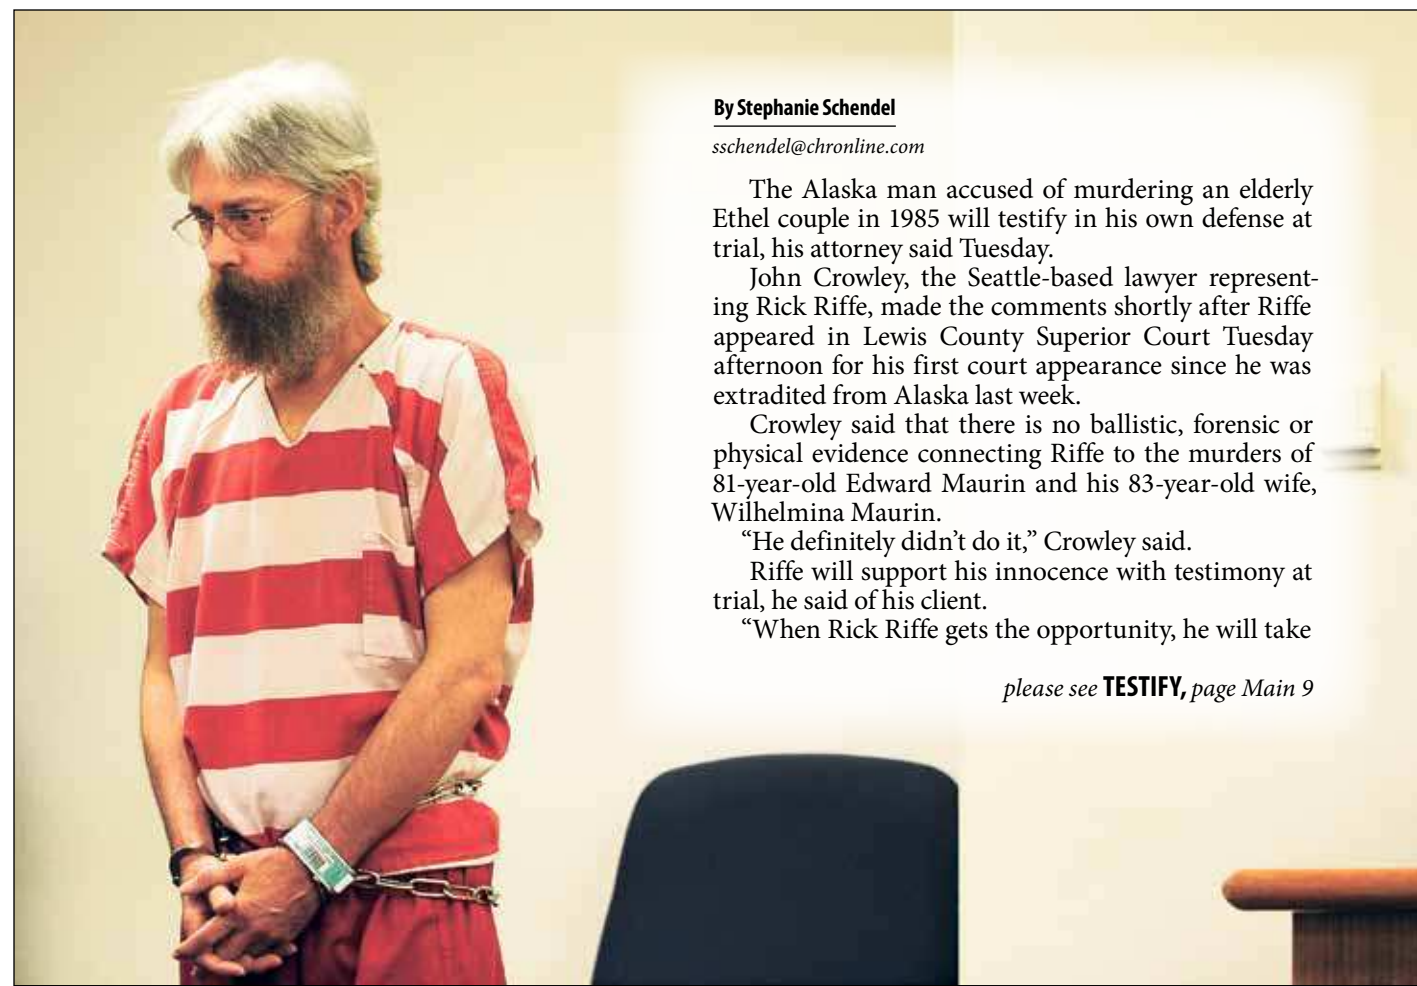

Crowley said that there is no ballistic, forensic or physical evidence connecting Riffe to the murders of 81-year-old Edward Maurin and his 83-year-old wife, Wilhelmina Maurin.

"He definitely didn't do it," Crowley said.

Riffe will support his innocence with testimony at trial, he said of his client.

"When Rick Riffe gets the opportunity, he will take

Memorial Museum to Honor Vietnam Vets

Vietnam veterans will be honored during a program Saturday, Aug. 4, at the Veterans Memorial Museum.

The program, beginning at 1 p.m., will feature guest speaker Col. Bruce Crandall, Medal of Honor recipient. Crandall was the helicopter pilot who continued to deliver men and ammunition while evacuating the wounded in the Battle of La-Drang Valley, 1966. His actions were portrayed in the book and movie, "We Were Soldiers."

Special music will be provided by the 133rd Army National Guard Band. During the program there will be a time to recognize and honor all Vietnam Veterans who attend. Following the program, all are invited for cake, cookies and coffee in the Museum Events Center.

For additional details, contact the Veterans Memorial Museum at 740-8875, email vmm@compprime.com or visit www.veteransmuseum.org.

The museum is located at 100 S.W. Veterans Way, Chehalis.

Man Arrested for Having Drugs, Burglary Tools, Weapon

By The Chronicle

Police arrested a Centralia man for alleged possession of burglary tools and methamphetamine after an officer contacted him because he matched a witness's description in an unrelated crime. Zachary J. Konoske, 18, Centralia, was arrested and booked for possession of methamphetamine, possession of burglary tools and carrying a dangerous weapon at about 10:30 p.m. Monday. Police were investigating a witness report of a suspect wearing a dark-colored hooded sweatshirt setting fire to a sign sitting on a doorstep of a business on Main Street. Police spotted Konoske, who was wearing a dark hoodie, and contacted him on the 1100 block of Elm Street, according to Centralia police. Konoske had a large pipe sticking out of his backpack and was carrying bike tires, according to police. When an officer approached Konoske, he kept putting his hands in his waistband and behind his back, despite being instructed to keep his hands visible, according to Centralia police. Police also said Konoske looked skittish as if he was going to run. When the officer patted him down, they found Konoske had a large, fixed blade knife in his back pocket, according to Centralia police. During a search, police reportedly found methamphetamine, shaved keys, which are used in stealing cars, as well as a file used to shave the keys.

New Cowlitz Valley District Ranger Arrives

By Amy Nile
anile@chronline.com

Employees at the Gifford Pinchot National Forest welcomed a new ranger for the Cowlitz Valley District on Monday.

Gar Abbas took the position vacated after six years by Kristie Miller, who earlier this year took a new job central Oregon. Mosè Jones-Yellin, who filled in for three months until Abbas arrived, is returning to Northern California.

Abbas said his first order of business is to meet all of the different partners and build on existing partnerships to effectively collaborate with the community. "We'll continue to do good work here," he said. Abbas grew up in the Redmond, Ore. area and earned both a Bachelor's and a Master's of Science at Southern Oregon University. He focused on fish and wildlife biology, primarily aquatic, and studied water law, natural resource policy and environmental ethics.

"Gar rose to the top for many reasons but a lot of it had to do with his enthusiasm to work with communities and his leadership skills," said Gifford Pinchot National Forest Supervisor Janine Clayton, who chose Abbas out of at least 15 other qualified applicants. "He's got a very strong natural resource background."

Abbas has held several positions throughout his career with the Forest Service including experience as a wildland firefighter, forest protection officer, fisheries biologist, special uses administrator, major projects manager, forest biologist, program manager and district danger and national recreation area manager. "He obviously has a wide breadth of experience and familiarity with the regional culture," Ken Sandusky, a spokesman for the Gifford Pinchot National Forest, told The Chronicle.

Abbas has lived and worked in desert regions of Oregon, Nevada, Arizona and southern California, as well as the dense old growth and riverine forests of southern Oregon and northern California.

"I always think seeing how things are done in different parts of the country and having a different perspective is helpful," Clayton told The Chronicle.

Abbas has served as district ranger on the Jarbidge and Ruby Mountain districts of the Humboldt-Toiyabe National Forest since 2009. Clayton said she knew she should hire Abbas when his supervisor said she didn't want to lose him.

Abbas recently relocated to Randle with his wife and two children from Wells, Nev. He said his family is looking forward to the opportunity to reengage in wetter country outdoor activities like fishing, boating and diving once they get settled.

"My family and I are real excited to be here," Abbas said. "Coming to the Northwest is a real homecoming for us."

More than 600 customers lost power Wednesday afternoon when a truck crashed into a utility pole near the intersection of Gold and Summa streets in south Centralia.

Truck Collides With Power Pole, Knocks Out Electricity for 688 Centralia Residents

By Kyle Spurr
kspurr@chronline.com

Power for 688 Centralia residents was knocked out Wednesday after a Chevrolet pickup truck crashed into a Centralia City Light pole at the intersection of Summa and Gold streets. Centralia Police Officer Patty Finch said the male driver had minor injuries after driving up on the sidewalk and colliding with the power pole. The man driving had an apparent medical emergency that caused the collision. Power had been restored for about 600 customers by 6 p.m. The remaining residents were expected to have power back by midnight, according to Centralia City Light. Gold Street was closed coming off the viaduct and traffic was being detoured to Tower Avenue and Floral Street as utility workers made repairs. Along with seven City Light workers, the Centralia Police Department, Riverside Fire Authority and the Lewis County Sheriff's Office all responded to the scene. Mock said the power pole came down on a parked Dodge Pickup truck, causing minor damage.

Chehalis Man Accused of Attempting to Burn Down Building Pleads Guilty to Arson

PRISON TIME: Chase Ettner Gets Two-Year Sentence

By Stephanie Schendel
sschendel@chronline.com

The Chehalis man accused of attempting to intentionally burn down his apartment building pleaded guilty as charged Monday afternoon in Lewis County Superior Court. Chase N. Ettner, 27, was arrested on July 15 after authorities responded to an apartment complex fire at his apartment building on 133 N. Market St. When police arrived on the scene of the fire, they found Ettner lying on the ground outside of the building surrounded by a group of people who told police that Ettner was responsible for starting the fire. He also smelled of gasoline and could not keep his balance because of apparent intoxication, according to court documents. The attempted arson occurred after Ettner got into a verbal dispute with his wife, according to authorities. Ettner's wife left the apartment with her children before he poured the gasoline on the carpet and lit it on fire.

A gas can was found inside the apartment and there were scorch marks on the carpet, according to authorities. Judge James Lawler sentenced Ettner to two years in prison, with credit for 16 days served. His sentence agreed upon by both the prosecutor as well as Ettner's defense attorney, Ken Johnson. Lewis County Deputy Prosecutor Will Halstead said Ettner was also recommended for drug and alcohol treatment because he was "severely intoxicated" when the incident occurred.

DOC to Host Meeting at Maple Lane Regarding Use of the Facility

By The Chronicle

The Department of Corrections will host a neighborhood meeting at the Maple Lane facility in Grand Mound at 6 p.m. tonight to inform the community of the possible use of the former juvenile rehabilitation center. Selena Davis, the media relations spokesperson for the Department of Corrections, said one of the main reasons for the meeting is to "quell the rumor mill" because several community members are concerned that offenders are already being held at the facility, which they are not. Davis said that they do have offender work crews who come working at the facility during the day to prevent vandalism and to maintain the property. At the end of the day, however, they all return to other correctional facilities. They will also discuss the options of how the facility may be use in the future, she said, however they do not have any definite plans. The local residents, community leaders and legislators are invited to attend the meeting. Maple Lane is located at 20311 Old Highway 9 SW in Centralia.

News in Brief

Sewer Replacement Project to Begin Monday in Centralia

By The Chronicle
Centralia will start a sewer main replacement project on Sixth Street between Pearl Street and the 6th Street viaduct on Monday.

The work is estimated to take six weeks to complete, according to City Engineer Jan Stemkoski. Pearl Street southbound will be closed at Sixth Street and traffic will be detoured to E Street and Fourth Street. The work will then move east toward the viaduct, which will close Tower Avenue, B Street and Sixth Street. Detour routes will be put in to route traffic around the closure. For question regarding this project, contact Stemkoski at 360-623-1845.

Level Three Sex Offender to Live in Chehalis

By The Chronicle
A level three sex offender has indicated to the Lewis County Sheriff's Office that he plans to live on the 100 block of LaBarre Road in Chehalis.

According to a news release from the Lewis County Sheriff's Office, Seth R. Liebich, 25, was convicted of indecent liberties with forcible compulsion in 2004. Liebich, who was 16 at the time, was convicted for sexually assaulting a developmentally-delayed 19-year-old woman, according to the release. As a result of his conviction, he was sentenced to 104 weeks in custody and completed an outpatient sex offender treatment program. "Liebich was categorized as a Level III offender based on an inability to control his compulsion and a history of sexually inappropriate behavior," according to the release. Liebich is described as a red-haired, 5-foot-10, white man, weighing 230 pounds with blue eyes.

Winlock Veteran Returns to B-17 Bomber for a Day

WAR MEMORIES: Jerry Brewer Served in WWII as Tailgunner on 'Flying Fortress'

By Kyle Spurr
kspurr@chronline.com

The last time Jerry Brewer saw an active B-17 bomber, he was a tailgunner for the plane on his final mission in Italy during World War II.

Brewer, a 90-year-old Winlock native, sat on his knees in the cramped cockpit during the war and shot two .50-caliber machine guns at approaching enemies.

"I've had planes hit pretty hard," Brewer said. "I could feel the plane move up and down."

After 50 missions in North Africa and Italy on B-17 bombers from 1943 to 1945, the Army released Brewer from his duty.

On Wednesday, Brewer returned to a B-17 bomber for the first time since 1945 when he visited the "Sentimental Journey," a B-17 bomber from the CAF Arizona Wing Aviation Museum in Mesa, Ariz. at the Chehalis-Centralia Airport.

"I've seen several (B-17 bombers)," Brewer said. "But they are hard to find."

Sitting in a wheelchair and wearing a hat that read "B-17 Flying Fortress," Brewer sat by the tail of the vintage plane with his nephew Steve Brewer.

"This is a nice old airplane,"

Brewer said. "I made it home safely many times."

Brewer, who now lives in an assisted living facility in Winlock, said he feels lucky to have survived World War II, considering the danger of fighting at nearly 30,000-feet above the ground.

Brewer still remembers the worst day in a B-17 bomber.

It was in June 1944 in Regensburg, Germany when 24 B-17 bombers went out and only 12 planes, including his, came back.

Each plane had nine to 10 people on them, Brewer said.

After World War II, Brewer worked as a mechanic in Longview and a rural mail carrier in Winlock before retiring.

Brewer, who grew up with seven siblings, got married, had two daughters and now has two granddaughters and a great-grandson.

With age, Brewer's memories are fading, but his wife Marion said he will always remember his time serving the county on a B-17.

"When it comes to flying, he still remembers everything," Marion said.

Centralia School District Faces Audit Recommendations on Cost Controls, Payroll

ROOM FOR IMPROVEMENT: State Auditor Warns District to Watch for Perceived Conflicts of Interest

By Amy Nile
anile@chronline.com

The State Auditor's Office has issued several recommendations for improvements to the Centralia School District. Most of the report's findings centered around the district's accounting practices, cost controls and payroll policies.

"We've had no misappropriation of funds or anything like that," said Superintendent Steve Bodnar.

The audit process, Bodnar explained, is extensive and auditors will always find areas where school districts or cities can improve.

The Auditor's Office cited the district for making payments of $34,930.56 during the 2011-2012 fiscal year to Thorbeckes for the indoor swimming pool management without adequate supporting documentation like a signed contract or payment paperwork.

"It is troubling to me to think we as a district made a large payment to a contractor like Thorbeckes without a binding contract in place that was reviewed and approved by the board first," Michael Kelly, a Centralia School Board, member wrote in an email to The Chronicle.

Bodnar said the District has had a signed contract with Thorbeckes since 2000 but part of the agreement needed to be updated to reflect utility costs prior to making the monthly payments.

The District provided an excel spreadsheet to the auditor in lieu of the contract or paperwork for payments made to the vendor.

"In addition, we noted that the District's policy states that decisions shall not be influenced by personal relationships," the audit report states.

Jenni Bodnar, the general manager of Thorbeckes, is married to Superintendent Bodnar.

"We also recommend that the District ensure the person signing the contract does not appear to have a conflict of interest," the report said.

While Bodnar has signed the agreement in the past, the assistant superintendent oversees the pool program and usually deals with Thorbeckes. Bodnar said the contract was in place prior to he and his wife taking their current positions.

"There is no conflict of interest. But there is a perceived conflict," Bodnar explained. "Notice they didn't say there is a conflict of interest."

Nancy Herzog, the president of the Centralia Education Association, said she believes the District really does try to make sure the assistant superintendent deals with Thorbeckes most of the time to avoid any issues.

In addition to addressing perceived conflict, the state recommended separating the director of fiscal service's ability to create new vendors in the system and to authorize payments.

The audit also suggested segregating duties of the payroll and human resources departments and adopting a more comprehensive payroll policy to include information on disbursement methods, pay dates, advance options, authorizations, reviews and approvals.

"There are some internal controls that need to be addressed," Bodnar said.

The report also noted that the District excluded two joint ventures and the table for future debt payments in the financial statement notes. The auditor asked the District to follow the School District Accounting Manual to ensure complete and accurate notes in future statements.

While the District does use the Office of Superintendent of Public Instruction's excess cost template, it failed to do so with supporting documentation in the Special Education Department, according to the audit.

Bodnar said the excess costs are related some special needs students, who cost the District more and require additional paperwork to funding.

In addition, the report questioned an amount of $8,361.90 paid to one employee because it said the District did not maintain appropriate time and effort records to support the cost.

Bodnar said this recommendation amounted to mistakes made on paperwork for federal funding which the staff is correcting with the individual employee.

Bodnar said the school board will look at the findings in August or September and find solutions to the audit recommendations.

"I have faith that the superintendent and the school board will rectify these problems promptly," Herzog said, "and do the right thing for the District and the school."

Exploded Outhouse Causes Up To $8,000 in Damage Inside Capital State Forest

By The Chronicle

The Washington Department of Natural Resources is seeking information related to an exploded outhouse in Capitol State Forest.

The damage occurred sometime this past weekend.

An unknown suspect, or suspects, put explosives inside of an outhouse located at the Middle Waddell Trailhead parking area in Capitol State Forest, said Bob Redling, the senior communications manager for the Washington State Department of Natural Resources.

The explosive damaged the wooden structure, making it unsafe for use, Redling said.

The cost of removing the structure and replacing the outhouse could range between $5,000 and $8,000 because of the certain specifications, like size and stability, he said.

"Outhouse toilets aren't sold at home depot," Redling said.

The area where it occurred gets a fair share of vandalism incidents, he said. Vandalism is a frequent problem at popular trailheads.

Fortunately, there is another toilet at the trailhead for patrons to use, Redling said. He said they currently do not have any tips of who is responsible but are asking anyone with information to call 911.

Residents Still Navigating Thurston County's New Critical Areas Ordinance

CONTENTIOUS: Debate Over Property Rights And Impacts on Endangered Species

By Bianca Fortis
bfortis@chronline.com

Thurston County recently updated its Critical Areas Ordinance and property owners in the county may find themselves having to navigate stricter rules and regulations.

As part of the state's Growth Management Act, counties and cities are required to develop policies and regulations that protect "critical areas." Those policies are to be made using the "best available science."

In Thurston County, the debate over how strict to make the ordinance has been especially contentious as conservationists have attempted to save endangered species, such as the Mazama pocket gopher. Property owners have long criticized the county for going too far.

Glen Morgan of STOP Thurston County, a property rights advocacy group, said property rights are critical.

"Property rights are the foundation of individual freedoms and prosperity," he said. "If we take them away, it's very difficult for the community to afford the benefits we support — like schools, police and fire. Without property rights, you have nothing."

Morgan said the biggest con-

"We'll attempt to provide as much certainty as possible, but we have to have some flexibility."

Andrew Deffobis
associate planner for Thurston County

cern about the new ordinance is structural: the rules are too vague, allowing county staff to interpret them as they like, he said.

"There's opportunity for a lot of corruption with the discretion the staff has in rejecting or accepting people's permits," Morgan said.

But Andrew Deffobis, an associate planner for the county, said the ordinance can't regulate for every possible situation.

"You have to provide some room for administrative interpretation," he said. "That's what the draft attempts to do."

He said a lack of clarity can be addressed in the future if it becomes an issue.

"We'll attempt to provide as much certainty as possible, but we have to have some flexibility," he said.

Deffobis said overall the ordinance is more restrictive, but that it was developed alongside the Department of Ecology and is consistent with other jurisdictions, at both the county and city level.

"We've relied on the best available science," he said. "It's not out of line with other jurisdictions and there are flexibility measurements built in. The buffers got bigger, but there's nothing to preclude people from building on their property."

The only exception is for people who are in the floodway of a river, he said.

Deffobis said the buffer range is still 50 to 300 feet, but the method by which the buffers are calculated has changed.

The unique topography and species of other regions — like Thurston's Mazama Pocket Gopher — are also taken into consideration.

"You can't take the science of eastern Washington and apply it to western Washington," he said. "The science must be applicable."

An example of a comparison is the wetland jurisdictional size. Before, in Thurston County the smallest wetlands were 2,500 square feet and that was if they were adjacent to a stream or in the floodplain.

But now, that's been decreased to 1,000 square feet, the same as it is in Lewis, Mason and Grays Harbor Counties.

Morgan said there was one strength in the ordinance — it prevents the LOTT Clean Water Alliance, which owns and operates wastewater treatment facilities, from continuing to do aquifer experiments with treated wastewater, he said.

Morgan said critics of the ordinance are currently studying it, and may appeal it.

Deffobis said the Critical Areas Ordinance is important to conserve resources, especially when the population is growing.

"We need good, clean water to drink," he said. "We don't want to let people build too close to things that are hazardous and could hurt them. And we want to provide for our natural environment, the habitat, the things that provide our quality of life."

Suspected Car Thief Tackled, Tased and Arrested by Police in Centralia

By The Chronicle

A Centralia man who police suspect was responsible for stealing his girlfriend's car and later trashing it was tackled, Tased and taken into custody after he fled from police when they attempted to contact him Monday evening.

Ruben A. Inman, 21, Centralia, was booked into the Lewis County Jail for alleged vehicle theft, malicious mischief, resisting arrest and escape, according to Centralia police.

Inman was recently released from prison, and his girlfriend, who lives in California, drove up to Washington to pick him up when he got out several weeks ago, according to police. Within a few days of being released, Inman had allegedly stolen her car and several credit cards. He then told her that if she called the police he would trash her car.

The girlfriend did call police, and Inman did trash her car, according to Centralia police.

Centralia police, who were already acquainted with Inman from past interactions, spotted him walking with another individual on South Silver Street and West Walnut Street Monday shortly after 8 p.m.

When officer attempted to stop Inman, he ran from police and tried to escape, according to Centralia police. Inman was subsequently tackled by police, but police said he continued to resist arrest so eventually he was Tased, then taken into custody.

Quest for Romance Leads to Robbery at Park

By The Chronicle

A 21-year-old man was robbed in Fort Borst Park Monday afternoon when he went to meet a woman who set him up to be robbed, according to Centralia police.

When the victim met the woman in a secluded area of the park, a second man showed up, and he and the woman both forcibly took the 21-year-old's wallet from him.

Both suspects fled the scene before police arrived shortly after 12:30 p.m., according to Centralia police. Police said the victim did not know the woman's name, and that the couple had a mutual friend who put them in contact.

It appears his intentions were to meet the woman for romantic courtship, while the girl's intentions were to rob him, according to Centralia police. The case is still under investigation and police have identified the female suspect, in addition to the woman who initially set them up who may be involved in the robbery scheme. Police are still trying to identify the man involved in the robbery.

Police Continue Search for Suspect in Wire Theft That Drew Gunfire

By Stephanie Schendel

sschendel@chronline.com

Police have new suspect information regarding the theft of copper wiring from a Toledo storage facility last week and are asking anyone with further information to contact the sheriff's office.

The two thieves, who are suspected of returning to the same property multiple times, were scared off by the owner of the storage facility early Monday morning after he hid overnight in an attempt to catch them in the act, according to the sheriff's office.

The owner, a 51-year-old Castle Rock man, was hiding when the first suspect arrived at about 12:30 a.m., according to the sheriff's office. The owner didn't immediately call 911, and instead watched the suspect steal for about 30 minutes and it wasn't until the second suspect arrived on his property that the owner attempted to confront the thieves.

Upon the arrival of the second suspect, the man came out of his hiding spot, shouted "Freeze!" and shone a light on them, said Chief Deputy Stacy Brown of the sheriff's office. He then discharged the firearm, which he told deputies he brought with him for protection, into the ground.

The man told deputies that the thieves had broken into his storage facility multiple nights and stole copper wiring, according to the sheriff's office. The total estimated loss from the thefts is about $24,000.

While initially the owner told deputies he did not get close enough to see the suspects, after further investigation a description of one of the suspects was developed, Brown said.

One of the suspects was described as a white man between the age of 22 and 35 with light brown, short hair, according to the sheriff's office. The suspect's vehicle was a late '80s or early '90s two-door Nissan Pathfinder that was grey or silver on the body of the vehicle, and black on the bottom and top of the car.

The sheriff's office urges anyone with information about the theft or the suspect to call 911 or Crime Stoppers or 1-800-748-6422 and is offering a reward for any suspect information that leads to an arrest.

Business Profile

Mr. J's Burger & Espresso, Home of the 'Man's Sandwich'

LOW AND SLOW:

Traditional Southern Style Barbecue Offered at a Centralia Diner and Drive-Through

By Amy Nile

anile@chronline.com

Southern barbeque meets New York deli and classic American diner at Mr. J's Burger & Espresso in Centralia. The small diner and drive-through makes delicious down-home sandwiches like sweet pulled pork fit to suit the likes of any barbecue snob, savory meatloaf and juicy burgers.

Customers often like to see the intense focus of owner Tom "Big T" Atkins as he intently puts together each sandwich, making sure every bite is perfect.

"They're watching me build a burger," he said. "This is a labor of love."

Occasionally, customers are delighted to find to pastrami, brisket or smoked corned beef in the daily offerings. Atkins said he makes some of his special items regularly and others only when he hears enough requests from regulars.

"Once word gets out that we have the brisket, it's gone," Atkins said.

Atkins also smokes turkeys or hams for customers around the holidays. For those who like hunting or fishing, he will even cook up venison or salmon upon request.

In addition to operating his business seven days a week, Atkins offers catering and has a mobile smoker to bring the barbecue to special events.

Atkins' partner, Rose Fittinger, does all the dry rubs and finishing sauces for the small family-run operation. The couple watches a lot of Food Network and both learned their art through trial and error.

"It took a lot of burnin' meat to get to this point," Atkins said with a laugh.

Tom Atkins prepares meat for the grill outside his restaurant Tuesday.

Today, he successfully smokes around 60 pounds of pork and 10 pounds of meatloaf a day. That's in addition, to his mouth-watering burgers, onion rings, crispy tots and appetizing comfort foods.

"I just like to put out good food and complement the traditional low and slow cooking," he said.

In the low and slow style, Atkins often cooks all night long as the meat for his top selling sandwiches take between five and 16 hours to smoke.

"We don't skimp on the sandwiches," he said. "It's a man's sandwich."

Atkins said the last thing he wants is for people to leave his place hungry.

"I have a food hangover," said Steve Heringlake of Yelm, finishing his delux sandwich at Mr. J's Tuesday afternoon.

Atkins strives to provide tasty food at affordable prices, offering combo meals for under $10.

"As a working man, I know

Tom Atkins, owner of Mr. J's Espresso and Barbecue, places one of four pork shoulders in his barbecue on Tuesday in front of his restaurant on North Pearl Street in Centralia.

you have to put out a nice effort to make a buck," he said. "If I didn't have bills, I'd do this for free."

A California native, Atkins has traveled all over the country and lived in Wyoming and New Hampshire before settling in Washington.

"But I've always had a taste for barbecue," he said

Growing up, Atkins said, all of his uncles would talk about opening a barbecue joint like the one his grandfather ran in the south, but no one ever did.

Atkins got his first cast iron Hibachi grill and started cooking at age 12.

"I guess I got the barbecue bug at an early age," said Atkins, who turns 51 on Friday.

A few years later he upgraded to a Weber grill and learned an indirect cooking style.

After working for nearly 30 years as a ceramic tile setter, Atkins got his first small barbecue pit in 2002. He started cooking for friends, family and his church and then expanded to paid catering gigs and farmer's markets.

"At that point we were looking for a home away from home," Atkins said.

The original owners of Mr. J's operated their little burger stand for 12 years, then the business changed hands a couple of times before Atkins purchased the property last August.

"By the time we got it the customer base was pretty small," Atkins said.

But pretty soon, the two barbecue pits out front started attracting more and more customers.

"We brought life back to this neighborhood," Atkins said.

Microsoft Says Farewell to Hotmail, Hello to Outlook.com

By The Seattle Times

Back in the day, Hotmail was, well, pretty hot.

It was one of the first free Web-based email services available, instantly attracting a lot of users. It still has hundreds of millions of users worldwide.

But it's time to start saying goodbye to Hotmail.

On Tuesday morning, Microsoft launched the preview version of Outlook.com, its new personal, free Web-based email service.

Eventually, Microsoft intends to migrate all Hotmail users to Outlook.com. But for the time being, Hotmail users can continue to use the same interface they've been using. Hotmail users who choose to do so will also be able to keep their Hotmail addresses even after moving over to Outlook.com.

Outlook.com combines both the familiar and the new.

Millions of people already use Outlook — Microsoft's email, contacts, calendar and task-management system — primarily at work. It also comes bundled with several versions of Office, Microsoft's productivity suite with a billion users worldwide.

It's a name people are familiar with and already associate with email.

Branding both the business and personal email offerings from Microsoft with the same name "is very simplifying" for people, said Dharmesh Mehta, a senior director at Microsoft.

At the same time, Outlook.com is a spiffed-up-looking version of Outlook, featuring a clean new design and new features.

Outlook.com came about when Microsoft realized that "Web mail hasn't kept up with what people are doing," Mehta said.

Outlook engineers began thinking about "what does it mean to have a modern email," he said.

Thus, Outlook.com includes features such as the option to connect to Facebook, Twitter and other social networks; the ability to open, edit and share Office documents anywhere via Office Web Apps; and options to easily connect in other ways, such as chat or a status update from a social network.

Still to come, Microsoft says, is the ability to make Skype video calls directly from your inbox.

Also, when emailing a person in your address book, there will be no ads featured, Microsoft promises.

There's also the ability to filter newsletters, group deals and the like.

These features are designed not just to modernize Microsoft's Web-based personal email service, but also to harmonize it with other changes the company is making.

Microsoft has been streamlining its brands lately, particularly for "Windows Live," a name that had been used to refer to software for PCs, a suite of Web-based services and a user's individual identification when he or she logged in to any Microsoft service. Now, the term "Microsoft account" is used to refer to a user's individual logon identity.

Outlook.com is also designed to be particularly compatible with Windows 8, which will launch on Oct. 26.

Both are supposed to be equally friendly to touch and mouse-and-keyboard input.

It's Microsoft's break from the past, said Wes Miller, an analyst with the independent research firm Directions on Microsoft.

"Hotmail is something from the old millennium," he said. "It was breakthrough in its time. And it's still very popular. But even down to its name, it's pretty dated.

Conservation Groups' Report Calls for Expanded Review of Coal Terminals

By The Daily News

Two wildlife conservation groups have joined calls for a massive environmental review of all six proposed coal terminals in the Pacific Northwest, including three in the Lower Columbia region.

On Tuesday, the National Wildlife Federation and the Association of Northwest Steelheaders released a 32-page report expressing concerns that coal dust could float off trains and settle in area rivers and streams during transport. Over time, coal dust containing mercury and other toxins could damage water quality and harm fish and other marine animals, according to the report, titled "The True Cost of Coal."

"Degraded fisheries, damaged communities, medical costs, harms to wildlife, and a continued burning of high carbon fuel will cost us dearly for decades," Felice Stadler, director of energy campaigns of the Virginia-based National Wildlife Federation, said in a written statement.

The groups requested the federal government conduct a "programmatic" environmental review of the terminals, which would measure the combined effects of coal transport throughout the Northwest.

Kudos to County for Taking the Long View

Our Views

There are some good ideas in the three-year strategic plan approved Monday by the Lewis County Commission.

An intriguing idea is a focus on the "high utilizers" of the criminal justice system. In other words, keeping the same people from recycling through the jail, where it's costly to house, feed and treat them for their physical and mental maladies.

Many of these frequent fliers are mentally ill or addicted to mind-altering drugs. The strategic plan proposes working with mental health and chemical dependency service providers, looking through statistical data and coordinating services to better address the underlying non-criminal problems. This is not projected to cost the county additional money.

A plan to create a youth traffic court under the county's existing district court is a logical way to deal with traffic infractions for those under age 18. Students, under the supervision of the court, serve as judges, jurors, lawyers and clerks.

This project, in cooperation with schools, is estimated to cost $5,000. That sounds like a good investment. A youth traffic court could help nip problems in the bud for drivers who are just finding their way. The other students helping run the system would gain valuable experience into the big picture, the kind of knowledge that will help them for a lifetime.

Other concepts are important and ongoing — and costly.

Public health goals include a comprehensive needs assessment, a project that can shine a light on the area's problems and possible solutions. That's estimated to cost $55,000.

Putting that plan to use to increase graduation rates, decrease teen pregnancy, reduce the incidence of homelessness, cut down on diabetes and heart disease, and increase immunizations rates will cost up to a half million dollars. Grants are expected to pay for some of that work.

Other items listed don't seem to fit under the "strategic" moniker. Setting up Wi-Fi for county buildings doesn't seem like it should be a priority during tough economic times. Adding a search engine to the county's website is a good and basic idea, but doesn't seem like it should require a big-picture revision nor another $5,000.

Other proposals for big construction projects should only be tackled carefully and after widespread agreement that these multi-million dollar projects are crucial for everyday citizens, not just the convenience of county workers.

Still, all in all, we approve of our elected officials' work to focus and prioritize time, resources and money for the best service to the people of Lewis County during a time of great need for public services but limited tax revenues.

COMMENTARY: I Was Just Thinking ...

Who Says Nothing Happens Around Here During the Summer?

A look at the calendar shows that there are three upcoming events which will certainly gain my attention this month. Last week on Channel 5's "Evening Edition" there was a short clip about one of the most delightful organizations in the state: The Wenatchee Youth Circus.

They performed here last summer at Thousand Trails Campground, and are returning for three shows this weekend.

There'll be performances at 1 p.m. and 5 p.m. on Saturday, and a final show on Sunday at 2 p.m. I intend to be there for the evening show on Saturday, if for no other reason than to take up a standing offer from the director, Paul Pugh, to sit down with the kids for a meal in the cookhouse.

I'll admit that Thousand Trails doesn't make it easy for non-campers to attend any of the circus' performances. Last year, I was charged what I thought was a pretty high price for admission to the site, and another fee for parking, but the circus is free. True, it's no Cirque du Soleil or Teatro ZinZanni, but it's a chance to see some future stars of the high wire and trapeze at a time when they're just starting to "get sawdust in their shoes."

Another event coming up — or should I say sneaking up — on us is the statewide primary election next Tuesday. With no printed voters pamphlet this election (I don't know if this will also apply to the general election in November) it's difficult to find out information about some pretty important races.

In particular I'm referring to the three positions for Justices of the State Supreme Court. These are people who will be deciding important issues which will affect all of us, and yet, how many of us are even remotely aware of the types of leanings or biases of any one of the candidates?

If you just automatically vote against an incumbent without learning how he or she has voted during their term of office, you're just throwing away your vote. And you're probably throwing away my vote as well.

So I urge you; unless you can make a reasoned choice instead of voting for a name which sounds good, please leave that part of your ballot blank. Here's a website which might help in making an informed decision instead of just "throwing a dart" at a ballot. <http://votingforjudges.org/index.html>

The third event I wanted to mention is, of course, the Southwest Washington Fair, starting on Aug. 14, which, I'm pleased to say, has some special meaning for the Moeller family this year. First of all, I was asked to bring back my straw hat, striped jacket and ukulele to sing songs of the 1920s on the South Stage (or Stage South, as they're calling it these days.)

This year, though, it will be at 3 p.m. on Senior Citizens Day, which hopefully will draw more aficionados of ancient music than the 10 or 12 who bravely subjected themselves to my fumbling fingers and aging vocal chords last year. We'll see. I know I'll have fun, whatever.

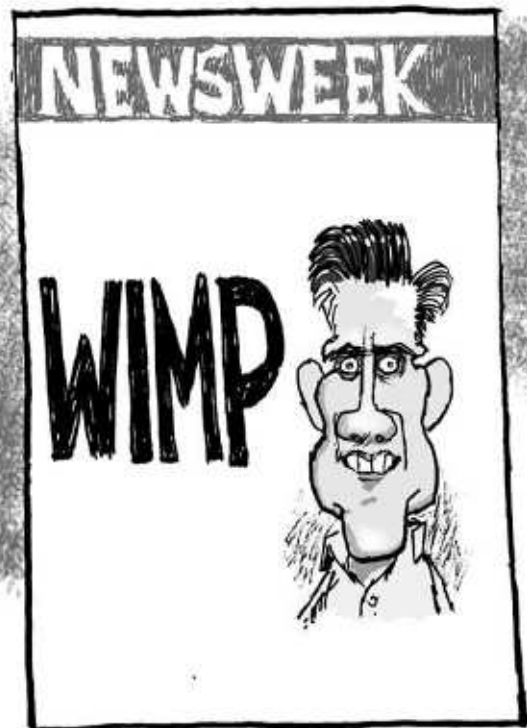

Then this year my son, Matthew, will also be appearing on that same stage on Sunday at 4 p.m. He's 1/3 of a group which calls itself The Whateverly Brothers. Their rollicking renditions of folk tunes, sea chanteys, Rock and Roll classics and even English madrigals is creating quite a following in the Puget Sound market, and has to be heard to be believed. You won't go away with a frown on your face, I gar-on-tee.

COMMENTARY: Call to Youth

Bridging the Generation Gap: Old and Young Should Learn to Work Together

It's fairly common to hear from older generations that the youth of today are foolhardy and ridiculous, while the youth often pull the "they just don't understand me" card and further stereotypes.

While fault can be found on both sides, there also needs to be remedial action from both parties.

At times, I completely understand why older people think that my generation and those close to us are disrespectful. There are those who do downright stupid things, but they do not define the rest of us. Remember, we are young and have less life experience; surely you were much the same when you were our age.

And for those of you that judge youth by appearance: don't. Some of the best, hardest working and nicest young people I've ever worked with are those that, at first glance, you'd expect to be slackers or drug addicts.

Take the time to get to know them and their passions, even if on the surface they don't seem to be desirable employees or friends. Remember that young people are more easily swayed by peer pressure and trends.

There is good reason for the stereotype of unruly young people, but it's just that — a stereotype. Just as not all Irish people are "leprechauns," not all youth are reckless and/or ridiculous.

And youth, don't think that

I'm trying to justify ridiculous behavior or appearance. Those of you who are giving the rest of us a bad reputation simply for being young are making getting decent jobs, or even just giving a respected opinion in society a difficult experience. If you want to be taken seriously, make an effort to look and act the part: I've yet to meet an older person who understands our obsession with ripped jeans, even if it is in style.

And for goodness sakes, speak appropriately!

There is an instinctual function of the human brain (relative to culture) called code switching that tells everyone how to speak appropriately in various situations. For instance, while you may use curse words in the presence of your friends, you don't swear in a job interview if you actually want to get hired. While appropriate codes seem to be less clearly defined nowadays, it is still important to speak appropriately to the situation, and youth, I think, are the most frequent rule-breakers in this case.

As young people, we must learn to bow to those with more experience and knowledge. I'll admit, I struggle with this as well: it is difficult to accept that you are wrong, especially when you are as headstrong as I am. But learning to accept that you are not always right and admitting it, is one of the most crucial steps to maturation.

As the age-old saying goes, respect your elders. They've been around the block and have a valid survival tip or two as to how to navigate the tricky waters of life. They possess wisdom that only comes with age, and that we can learn from without having to experience the difficulties they have. I suggest finding an older, wiser mentor who can help you to bridge the generation gap and find your place in a more mature world.

Elders, you aren't off the hook either. The same goes for you when it comes to listening to other's ideas: simply because we are young does not mean that our thoughts have no value. We bring a fresh perspective to the table that you may not have previously considered. Do not become the old dog that can't learn new tricks: take a chance on a young person's idea, and let them prove its worth. Give us advice, but let us make our own mistakes as well.

Life experience, especially failure, is the key to wisdom.

As an added bonus, we have the energy to follow through with our plans that so many elders complain that they're lacking. In short, youth can be a very useful asset to your ventures.

Someday, today's youth will be the dominant generation, and we need the opportunities to prepare for that. Will it mean change? Absolutely, for no generation is the same as another. Does that mean that one is better than the other? Not in the slightest.

To youth and elders alike: learn to respect one another, because you both have invaluable resources that the other does not. By bridging the generation gap through communication and acceptance, you'll learn to work together to build a brighter future for both.

Centralia Man Airlifted to Harborview After I-5 Motorcycle Collision

By The Chronicle

A Centralia man riding on a motorcycle collided with another vehicle on Interstate 5 and was airlifted to Harborview Medical Center in Seattle Wednesday night.

Christopher L. Fee, 30, Centralia, was driving a 1996 Harley Davidson Motorcycle, made a lane change and collided with another vehicle driving northbound near milepost 96 at about 9:40 p.m., according to a press memo from Washington State Patrol.

The cause of the collision was speed, and the Fee will be referred for charges for suspicion of driving under the influence, according to Washington State Patrol. The driver and passenger in the other vehicle were uninjured and their vehicle was not damaged.

When paramedics arrived on scene they found Fee had an altered level of consciousness and suffered multiple traumatic injuries, according to a West Thurston Regional Fire Authority press release.

Medics on scene intubated the man and put him on a backboard before he was airlifted, according to the release.

While medics were responding to the incident they received a 911 call from a pregnant woman having contractions who was stuck about 40 cars back in the traffic caused by the collision, according to the release. The woman was treated and released at the scene.

A tow truck later removed the totaled motorcycle from the scene.

Inslee Spends More Than $1 Million on TV Ads Ahead of Primary; McKenna at $800,000

By Jim Brunner

The Seattle Times

Democratic gubernatorial candidate Jay Inslee is outspending Republican rival Rob McKenna on TV ads in the run-up to Tuesday's deadline for mailing in primary-election ballots.

Inslee has spent more than $1 million on TV spots already, according to reports filed with the state Public Disclosure Commission. That compares with about $800,000 for McKenna.

Both candidates have used their first ads to introduce themselves in a positive light.

McKenna's first spot showed him rapid-fire chatting with his family about his plans for the state. Inslee's first two ads prominently feature him sitting atop a bulldozer, referencing a job he had in college, as he talks up his job-creation goals.

torney General, leads in fundraising, having pulled in more than $7.4 million. Inslee, the former Congressman, has raised about $7.1 million (including about $1 million from the state Democratic Party.)

McKenna is in a good spot to add to his fundraising edge this week, as he traveled to Colorado Wednesday for a big-time GOP gathering where he can hobnob with some of the party's top national donors.

The Republican Governors Association (RGA) event at a luxury Aspen resort is drawing presidential candidate Mitt Romney in addition to Republican governors and top prospects like McKenna.

According to POLITICO, the guest list for the RGA retreat "reads like a who's who of the most influential players in GOP politics," including Karl Rove and Kevin Gentry, a top aide to billionaire businessmen Charles and David Koch. The events, POLITICO notes, typically feature panel talks on policy mixed with dinners that allow top donors to mingle with the GOP governors.

Charles McCray, a McKenna campaign spokesman, confirmed McKenna was at the event in part to attend a fundraiser organized for him by Colorado Attorney General John Suthers. He said McKenna will return Friday.

No State Money for Park System: What's Next?

UNPRECEDENTED MANDATE: Lawmakers Told Parks System to Begin Operating With No State Funding in 2013, But Their Plan Has Brought in Less Than Half the $32 Million Expected

By Javier Panzar
The Seattle Times

As Washington's storied parks prepare for their 100th birthday next year, celebratory sentiment has been tempered by a fundamental question: What kind of system can this cash-strapped state afford?

With many areas of state government reeling from budget cuts, lawmakers in Olympia have given Washington's parks system an unprecedented mandate to begin operating with no state funding beginning in 2013.

So far, it has been a rough transition. The linchpin in this new model is the Discover Pass, a $30 annual or $10 daily parking permit needed to access parks and other state lands. But a year after taking effect, the pass has brought in less than half of the $32 million expected.

Now the parks system is under mounting pressure to move toward a new self-funding model that can keep all the parks open.

"We are no longer getting a free check from the government," said Don Hoch, director of state parks. "We are now in competi-

"We are now in competition. We have to provide people a service (users) want to come for in order to pay our bills."

Don Hoch
Director of State Parks

tion. We have to provide people a service (users) want to come for in order to pay our bills."

The idea is for the park system to operate more like a business, but that is new ground for a system more accustomed to park preservation than collecting user data and mounting marketing campaigns.

HOCH SAID the parks must strike a delicate balance between attracting younger users with new amenities like Wi-Fi Internet access at parks, developing new revenue streams and determining the level of service the parks can afford to provide.

Partnerships with local government or nonprofits will also play a role in the future of park management, according to a new report released Tuesday on parks. Already at Fort Worden State Park in Port Townsend, plans are moving forward to have a public development authority comanage the park with the state and develop new programs and uses, a move that riles some locals and union officials.

An education center is one idea, said Dave Robison, executive director of the public development authority.

"At no time in our 100-year history have we been in a position like this, where we have to make so many tough decisions," said Hoch.

The draft report offers a glimpse into changes that have already taken place and what could be in store, as the parks develop a self-funded system.

On the user end, the system is exploring the idea of charging variable rates for campgrounds based on demand. In theory, the price for securing a camping spot in sunny July could run more than a June weekend, with its more iffy weather. Or, for instance, a popular spot on a promontory might be more expensive than a viewless spot.

In recent years, the system has also made a big push to increase non-recreational leases of land, including communication towers and utility lines, and brought in $1.1 million.

That new revenue isn't the silver bullet that will save the parks system, but Hoch said efforts like those add up. The report said the system is pursuing new revenue from energy development and gravel extraction. Also included in the report is a request to the Legislature to ease restrictions on advertising and sponsorships in parks.

BEYOND NEW REVENUE, the report states in sharp terms that the parks cannot become fully self funded, calling the model "impractical" and "unachievable." No other state in the country follows such a model, according to the report. Michigan, for instance, receives no funds from the state general fund, but gets revenue from a dedicated oil tax as well as a large endowment.

The report, which is up for consideration at the park commission's Aug. 9 meeting, makes a budget request for $18 million from the state for 2013-15 to act as a bridge while various business initiatives take effect.

During the current two-year budget cycle, the parks system is operating on a $148 million budget, with the state general fund paying roughly 12 percent.

It is unclear whether state lawmakers might change their minds about making parks self-funded and reopen budget talks about funding.

State Rep. Larry Seaquist, D-Gig Harbor, said the Discover Pass has failed and said he would work with other legislators to restore funding to the parks system.

THOUGH FUNDING IS TIGHT in Olympia, he said support still could be rallied for parks.

"It is a high priority for voters," he said "For many people, those parks are the only outing that they can get, and we need to keep those (usage) costs as close to zero as we can."

The park system already took big hits in funding earlier this year. It shifted 66 of 189 rangers to seasonal employment and administration has been cut drastically, the report said. There are 117 parks and properties in the system.

Taking these kinds of steps and planning for a future with limited or no state funds is a prudent move, said Brian Trusty, a management consultant with PROS Consulting, of Indianapolis, who specializes in planning for parks and recreation agencies.

Trusty has worked for California's and Arizona's park systems, among others, and is working with Fort Worden's public development authority to develop a business plan.

Parks have to get used to the "new normal" of state budgeting and not expect funding to return to levels before the economic downturn, he said.

The hard part will be striking a balance between what Washington residents want out of their parks and what they and their representatives are willing to pay for.

"This is a debate we see play out every day about how government works and how we spend government money," Trusty said. "What we are seeing is part of a long transition as a country, that we are having to re-look at how government works because of what we are willing to pay."

House Panel OK's Herrera Beutler Forest Roads Bill

By The Columbian

The U.S. House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee on Wednesday unanimously passed legislation that would undo a 2010 federal court ruling requiring logging companies to get discharge permits for water runoff on logging roads.

The bill, co-sponsored by 3rd District Rep. Jaime Herrera Beutler, R-Camas, has won praise from local forestland owners, who under the 9th U.S. Circuit Court ruling would be required to obtain a National Pollution Discharge Elimination System permit for stormwater runoff on those roads. This is the same permit required for water runoff from "point sources" such as factories and parking lots.

Following the ruling, the Washington Forest Protection Association warned of a regulatory nightmare if the ruling took effect. Local forestland owners said it would bring forest management to a halt, and that they already are required to develop comprehensive road maintenance plans under the state's Forests and Fish rule.

In December, President Barack Obama signed a one-year protection from the court ruling. The "forest roads protection bill" Herrera Beutler introduced would treat logging roads on private land as "nonpoint" pollution sources that do not require additional permits.

"We can preserve water quality and forest health, and we can do it without crushing businesses with this unnecessary permitting requirement," Herrera Beutler said in a statement released Wednesday. "Permanently eliminating this rule once and for all would be a victory for an industry that provides good jobs to folks in Southwest Washington and elsewhere."

The 2010 ruling by a three-judge panel of the 9th Circuit came in a lawsuit filed by the Northwest Environmental Defense Center against then-Oregon State Forester Marvin Brown and the Oregon Department of Forestry involving two logging roads serving Oregon's Tillamook State Forest.

Uninsured Washington smokers looking to kick the habit will once again have state-funded assistance to do so.

The Washington State Department of Health has resurrected the tobacco quitline one year after eliminating the free service for those who are uninsured or underinsured.

"A quitline is absolutely necessary," said Tim Church, state health department spokesman. "We were the only state in the nation without a quitline for the uninsured."

Riffe is being held in the Lewis County Jail with bail set at $5 million. An arraignment is scheduled for 3 p.m. on Aug. 23.

The 53-year-old Riffe is charged with first-degree murder, kidnapping and other counts in the deaths of the Maurins. The couple died from shotgun blasts, and their bodies were found at the end of a road west of Chehalis five days after their family reported them missing.

The Lewis County Sheriff's Office says Riffe, of King Salmon, Alaska, and his brother, John Riffe, were the primary suspects all along, but probable cause for their arrest was not developed until much later when additional witnesses came forward.

John Riffe died earlier this year from ongoing health issues.

Rick Riffe is also suffering from some serious health problems, Crowley said, and in jail Rick uses an oxygen tank that he brought down from Alaska with him.

Rick appeared in court Tuesday without the oxygen tank, but dressed red and white jail grab, his hands chained at his

"We are thrilled the quitline is back up and running and available for those who want help quitting tobacco," said Theresa Cross, with Clark County Public Health. "For those persons without employer-provided insurance that has quitting benefits, there was very little available while the quitline was down."

In the last year, more than 6,500 people statewide who called the quitline didn't qualify for services.

Of those, about 3,500 asked to be notified if the state ever revived the quitline. Operators have already started making calls to those people, Church said.

While health officials are cheering the return of the service, the celebrating may be short-lived. Funding only guarantees the lines will remain open through June 2013.

The health department is using the remaining $1.7 million in the tobacco prevention and control account to reopen the phone line, Church said. The state will also use a portion of a $400,000 grant from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Internet Security Bill Supporters Scramble

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate could leave town this week for a monthlong break without passing legislation to protect the U.S. electrical grid, water supplies and other critical industries from cyberattack and electronic espionage.

Congressional sponsors of the bill scrambled Wednesday to overcome Republican resistance to the measure, but they appeared short of the votes needed for passage despite dire warnings from top national security officials about the potential for devastating assaults on the computer networks that control the country's essential infrastructure.

Massachusetts Governor Often Irked State's Democratic Lawmakers

BOSTON (AP) — What worked for Mitt Romney in the corporate boardroom didn't fly in the more raucous corridors of the Massachusetts Legislature.

Now the Republican candidate for president, Romney took over as governor in 2003 after a long, successful career as CEO at the private equity firm Bain Capital.

But his top-down, corporate management style soon rankled Democrats who overwhelmingly controlled the state House and Senate and saw themselves as an equal partner in the government. His approach jolted a clubby political culture where schmoozing over after-hours drinks and cutting backroom deals are well-worn pathways to success.

Unlike his three GOP gubernatorial predecessors, the politically inexperienced Romney was never at ease in the chummy world of trading favors for votes. He bypassed rank-and-file Democrats and dealt mostly with the party's legislative leaders during his four-year term, though he did work with Democrats to pass the state's health care overhaul.

Romney's mostly fraught relations with state lawmakers could provide insight into how he'd handle a Congress that might still be politically divided if he becomes president.

Judge in Drew Peterson Trial to Rule on Mistrial Motion

CHICAGO (AP) — A judge is set to decide Thursday whether to declare a mistrial and put an end to Drew Peterson's murder trial just days after it began, and legal experts say the ruling could result in the former suburban Chicago police sergeant going free, though that remains unlikely.

The expected ruling by Judge Edward Burmila follows several blunders by prosecutors, who are seeking to prove the 58-year-old Peterson killed his third wife, Kathleen Savio, in 2004. He also is a suspect in the 2007 disappearance of his fourth wife, Stacy Peterson, but has never been charged in her case.

A furious Burmila admonished prosecutors Wednesday after the second witness in just their second day of testimony began talking about finding a .38-caliber bullet on his driveway. Thomas Pontarelli, a former neighbor of Savio's, hinted in his testimony that Peterson may have planted it there to intimidate him.

Prosecutors later admitted under tough questioning by the judge that there was no evidence to support the claim. And Burmila wondered aloud about whether the testimony made Peterson appear menacing in jurors' eyes and undermined his ability to get a fair trial.

In addition to declaring a mistrial, Burmila also could possibly find the state deliberately entered testimony explicitly barred in advance of the trial — a ruling that would mean Peterson can't be tried again for murder in Savio's death and would be freed, according to Gal Pissetzky, a Chicago defense attorney with ties to the Peterson case.

Immigrants Prove to Be Big Business For Prison Companies

By Garance Burke and Laura Wides-Munoz

The Associated Press

MIAMI — The U.S. is locking up more illegal immigrants than ever, generating lucrative profits for the nation's largest prison companies, and an Associated Press review shows the businesses have spent tens of millions of dollars lobbying lawmakers and contributing to campaigns.

The cost to American taxpayers is on track to top $2 billion for this year, and the companies are expecting their biggest cut of that yet in the next few years thanks to government plans for new facilities to house the 400,000 immigrants detained annually.

After a decade of expansion, the sprawling, private system runs detention centers everywhere from a Denver suburb to an industrial area flanking Newark's airport, and is largely controlled by just three companies.

The growth is far from over, despite the sheer drop in illegal immigration in recent years.

In 2011, nearly half the beds in the nation's civil detention system were in private facilities with little federal oversight, up from just 10 percent a decade ago.

The companies also have raked in cash from subsidiaries that provide health care and transportation. And they are holding more immigrants convicted of federal crimes in their privately-run prisons.

THE FINANCIAL BOOM, which has helped save some of these companies from the brink of bankruptcy, has occurred even though federal officials acknowledge privatization isn't

The total average nightly cost to taxpayers to detain an illegal immigrant, including health care and guards' salaries, is about $166, up from $80 in 2004.

according to ICE report necessarily cheaper.

This seismic shift toward a privatized system happened quietly. While Congress' unsuccessful efforts to overhaul immigration laws drew headlines and sparked massive demonstrations, lawmakers' negotiations to boost detention dollars received far less attention.

The industry's giants — Corrections Corporation of America, The GEO Group, and Management and Training Corp. — have spent at least $45 million combined on campaign donations and lobbyists at the state and federal level in the last decade, the AP found.

CCA and GEO, who manage most private detention centers, insist they aren't trying to influence immigration policy to make more money, and their lobbying and campaign donations have been legal.

"As a matter of long-standing corporate policy, CCA does not lobby on issues that would determine the basis for an individual's detention or incarceration," CCA spokesman Steve Owen said in an email to the AP. The company has a website dedicated to debunking such allegations.

GEO, which was part of The Wackenhut Corp. security firm until 2003, and Management and Training Corp. declined repeated interview requests.

ADVOCATES FOR IMMIGRANTS are skeptical of claims that the lobbying is not meant to influence policy.

"That's a lot of money to listen quietly," said Peter Cervantes-Gautschi, who has helped lead a campaign to encourage large banks and mutual funds to divest from the prison companies.

The detention centers are located in cities and remote areas alike, often in low-slung buildings surrounded by chain-link fences and razor wire. U.S. Migrations and Customs Enforcement agents detain men, women and children suspected of violating civil immigration laws at these facilities. Most of those held at the 250 sites nationwide are illegal immigrants awaiting deportation, but some green card holders, asylum seekers and others are also there.

The total average nightly cost to taxpayers to detain an illegal immigrant, including health care and guards' salaries, is about $166, ICE confirmed only after the AP calculated that figure and presented it to the agency.

That's up from $80 in 2004. ICE said the $80 didn't include all of the same costs but declined to provide details.

Olympic Games Organizers Defend Sponsors' Rights

LONDON (AP) — Perhaps we should have seen this coming.

Back in 2007, a butcher at the Fantastic Sausage Factory in the quaint English county of Dorset was told to remove a window sign depicting sausage meat twisted into the shape of the the five Olympic rings.

And last year, competitors in a baking contest in bucolic Shropshire were warned by games organizers to drop plans to place Olympic-themed marzipan figurines atop their cakes.

But those were merely preliminary skirmishes in a multibillion-dollar sponsorship battle that has drawn charges that London organizers have been heavy-handed, and just plain stupid, in their zealous enforcement of branding restrictions.

"The rules were intended to stop the big brands from getting a free ride on the Olympic good will," said Michael Payne, a former IOC marketing director who now works as a consultant.

Syrian Rebels Use Captured Regime Tank in Aleppo

BEIRUT (AP) — Syrian rebels on Thursday bombarded a military air base in Aleppo using a tank captured from government troops as activists reported that the regime has unleashed new raids against opposition fighters near the capital Damascus, killing dozens.

The Aleppo report was one of the first indications the rebels are starting to deploy the heavy weapons they've managed to capture in the past weeks from the Syrian army. The Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said the rebel-seized tank shelled the Menagh military airport outside Aleppo, which the regime has used to launch attacks on rebel positions in the surrounding area.

Rami Abdel Rahman, the director of the Observatory, said it was not the first time the rebels have used the tanks they have captured by the regime.

It is, however, rare and represents an escalation in the battles between the two sides. Up to this point, rebel forces have suffered from the huge disparity in armaments with Syria's well-armed military that also has fighter jets and helicopter gunships at its disposal.

Rebel forces in northern Syria attacked the country's largest city of Aleppo two weeks ago and have captured several neighborhoods, mostly lower income areas on the periphery which they have since held despite ground and air assaults by the government.

French Alps Town Bans Wingsuit Flights

PARIS (AP) — The French town of Chamonix, deep in the shadow of Mont Blanc, has always embraced danger.

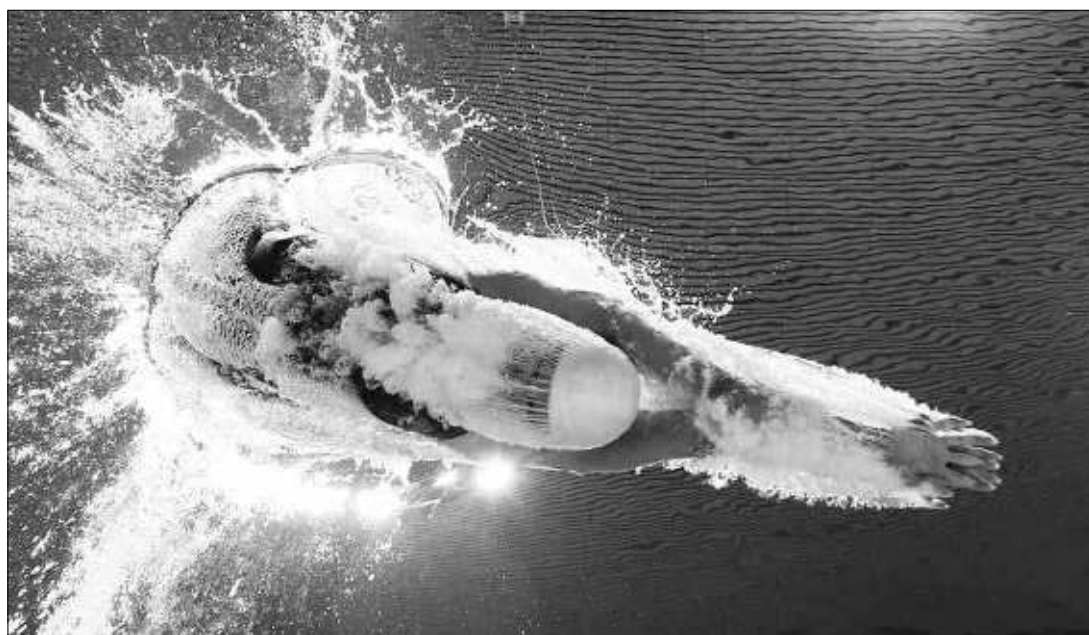

Climbers scale Europe's highest peak in dire conditions. Backcountry skiers risk avalanches or falling off cliffs.

But the arrival this summer of the wingsuit flyers offered peril on an entirely new scale. For nearly two months, daredevils in skin-tight suits with batwing sleeves and a flap between their legs hurled themselves off the Brevent cliff, soaring through the Alpine skies. Last week, tragedy struck: A Norwegian wingsuit flyer was killed when his parachute failed to open.

The next day, the mayor of Chamonix-Mont Blanc banned wingsuits.

The decision has triggered a debate about how to weigh the dangers of extreme sport against the passion of the thrill-seekers the Alpine town has famously encouraged. The ban isn't meant to be permanent — local officials hope to come up with a set of rules on wingsuits that will satisfy everyone. But Chamonix remains shaken.

Palestinians Brace For Repercussions Over UN Bid

By Mohammed Daraghmeh

The Associated Press

RAMALLAH, West Bank — An internal document says Palestinians must prepare for possible harsh reactions by the U.S. and Israel if they go ahead with plans to seek U.N. recognition of "Palestine" as a non-member observer state in the General Assembly.

Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas, backed by Arab League, is ready to take this step but hasn't decided on when. A senior Palestinian official says Abbas leans towards waiting until after the U.S. presidential election, in line with a U.S. request. The official spoke on condition of anonymity because of the sensitivity of the issue.

The document, obtained Thursday, outlines possible repercussions, including a suspension of U.S. aid and additional Israeli restrictions on Palestinian movement.

Charlotte Police Say They're Ready For Protests

By Michael Biesecker and Mitch Weiss

The Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — For this summer's Democratic National Convention, Charlotte will add thousands of police from outside departments and spend millions on training, equipment and temporary barriers. But their biggest aid in crowd control will be one they didn't have to purchase, build or teach: The layout of the city itself.

Convention-related activities will take place in the heart of the city's central business district, which is flat and ringed by expressways. There are no nearby neighborhoods where protesters could overflow and cause trouble if violence erupts. Unlike Tampa, which is hosting this summer's Republican convention, there is no adjoining body of water to complicate efforts to control crowds.

Still, with so many variables to manage, the police chief acknowledges he often wakes up in the middle of the night to write down things he still needs to do.

The September convention is an event unlike any the city has seen, likely to draw thousands of demonstrators who range from the peaceful and politically minded to anarchists bent on disrupting the events.

"During those demonstrations, you're going to constantly have people trying to stir things up. If they're not making an impact, you keep moving things along. But if they start agitating people, you have to take action," Police Chief Rodney Monroe said in an interview. "You want to treat people fairly. As long as you facilitate helping the greater number of people out there demonstrating, we want to keep them on our side."

The city of 760,000 is spending $50 million in federal funds to buy new equipment, train officers and make other security adjustments for the convention being held from Sept. 4-6. The police force's yearlong preparations also included sending 100 officers to help maintain order in Chicago during chaotic protests at a NATO conference in May.

Library System Sets Salary for New Director at $120K

TIMBERLAND: 'Minimum' Pay Will Come With Additional Perks

By Steven Friederich
The Daily World

The next director of the Timberland Regional Library District will make at least $120,000 in annual salary. That doesn't include the potential perks for a travel allowance, cell phone allowance, moving expenses and everything else that could come, as well.

The "floor amount" for the next library director means it's an automatic $5,000 bump over the amount the district already pays Acting Director Gwen Culp, who gets $115,000 per year plus a $700-a-month car allowance. That's the same salary paid to former director Michael Crose.

The Timberland Regional Library Board of Trustees met in Ilwaco last week and approved the salary minimum, noting that it could climb even higher depending on the qualifications of the candidates.

Board member Edna Fund, who represents Lewis County, was the only member to vote against the increase, saying she didn't feel comfortable raising the lowest possible salary offered past what Culp was already making.

Board members asked their general counsel if they could discuss general salary requirements in executive session, but the attorney said that wouldn't qualify as an executive session item since they're talking about general policy.

The Board of Trustees has hired a professional headhunter to help find the best pool of candidates for the position. The consultant originally asked the board to set the salary minimum at $125,000 and not to put a cap on it.

Board members reduced that amount to $120,000, but still didn't put a cap on how high the salary could go.

Board member Corby Varness, who represents Grays Harbor, said she feels comfortable with a minimum salary of $120,000.

"I'm a little concerned about cost of living," she said during the meeting, arguing against lowering the minimum salary any lower. "If a person lives in Montesano they have a chance at buying a home," Varness said. "In Olympia, I can't see that happening if they live anywhere near the service center" in Tumwater.

Varness, who is on the hiring committee, said on Tuesday that they hope to do some interviews in November and have a final candidate selected by the end of the year.

Advertisements for the new position should be going out soon, she said.

The board of trustees terminated former director Michael Crose in April, largely over communication issues. They replaced Crose with Culp, who has said she's not interested in applying for the permanent position.

McKenna's Education Plan Calls for Capped Spending

By The Seattle Times

Republican gubernatorial candidate Rob McKenna offered up new details Tuesday of how he'd try to substantially boost state education spending without raising taxes.

At its core, McKenna's plan assumes he can cap the growth of all noneducation state spending at no more than 6 percent per biennium, while state revenue would increase by 9 percent per biennium.

McKenna says his plan could free up $1.7 billion in new money for K-12 and higher education by 2013-15, fully meeting court-mandated spending for public schools.

By the 2019-21 biennium, he says, his proposal would provide an additional $4.7 billion for public schools and universities on top of the court-ordered improvements, reversing a decades long slide in state support for education.

"We think we have to make this choice if we are serious about fully funding our schools," McKenna said at a briefing with reporters in Seattle.

While the plan provides a guide to his aspirations as governor, McKenna's latest offering is not likely to settle the central question about whether his ideas are realistic. Democrats questioned how he'd achieve his cost savings — particularly in fast-growing areas like health care — to keep his education pledges.

State Rep. Ross Hunter, D-Medina, a leading House budget writer, said much of the growth pressures on the state budget come from medical costs, including services for the poor and elderly.

"You would have to take thousands of seniors off of health care," Hunter said. "Everybody has a wish that this stuff wouldn't grow, but if wishes were horses, beggars would ride."

McKenna said he'd push to cut costs in health care for the poor by encouraging more clients to move to health-maintenance organizations and other types of managed care. Similarly, he said he'd intensify ongoing efforts to encourage state workers to switch to cheaper, consumer-directed health-care plans that offer lower premiums with higher deductibles.

His plan also expects savings by reducing the government workforce through attrition and using more competitive state contracting. McKenna said he was basing his revenue-growth assumptions on projections by the state Office of Financial Management. "They're pretty conservative assumptions. They're not wild and crazy down there," he said.

The focus on education funding has been driven in part by a state Supreme Court ruling earlier this year that said the state isn't meeting its constitutional obligation to amply pay for basic public education.

He proposes a levy swap to make education funding more consistent as required by the court ruling earlier this year.

McKenna also said that by 2019, he wants 48 percent of the state general-fund budget spent on public schools. Currently, 44 percent of the budget is allocated to public education from kindergarten through the end of high school.

Crop Circles Discovered in E. Washington Wheat Field

By The Associated Press

Mysterious crop circles have appeared in an eastern Washington wheat field — not far from the nation's largest hydropower producer — but area farmers preparing for the summer's harvest find the distraction more amusing than alarming.

"You can't do anything other than laugh about it," said Cindy Geib, who owns the field along with her husband, Greg. "You just kind of roll with the theory it's aliens and you're special because aliens chose your spot."

Friends called the Geibs on July 24 when the pattern of flattened wheat was spotted off Highway 174, about five miles north of the town of Wilbur. The field is about 10 miles south of the Grand Coulee dam, which the Bureau of Reclamation says is the largest hydropower producer in the United States.

The circles resemble a four-leaf clover and remind Cindy Geib of Mickey Mouse ears. The design knocked down about an acre of their wheat. Some of it could be salvaged by combines when the harvest starts in a week or two, she said, but some will be lost.

"Of course, we don't have alien insurance," she said.

Crop circles have been a worldwide phenomenon for decades, and this is not the first one in Lincoln County. Similar circular patterns were left in crops in the Wilbur area in 2010 and in 2008 or 2009, Geib said.

Lynne Brougher, public affairs officer for the Grand Coulee dam, hadn't heard about the latest crop circles but said the previous one was no cause for alarm.

"It seemed to be highly unusual," Brougher said. "As I recall from a couple of years ago, there was no good explanation of how they got there."

Still, she added, "it wasn't a concern."

The latest crop circle was first reported Tuesday by Spokane station KHQ-TV. There were no signs that anyone walked into the field.

"We're trying to figure out how they got out there without breaking any of the wheat. It's hard to walk through the crunchy wheat and not knock it down," Geib said. "At the same time, it's hard to think it's aliens. It's a bizarre thing to wrap your brain around."

Geib's daughter-in-law, Kelly Geib of Wilbur, says the crop circle has given the family something to ponder and chuckle about.

"The kids all like to say the aliens have come, and we're happy to indulge them," she said.

Judge: Longview Couple Mistreated 2 of 5 Adopted Kids

KELSO (AP) — A Superior Court judge convicted a Longview couple on Tuesday of withholding food from two of their five adopted children.

Jeffrey and Rebecca Trebilcock, both 45, starved their then-13-year-old adopted son nearly to death and denied a significant amount of food to his biological sister, Cowlitz County Judge Michael Evans decided. The girl was 12 when she and her adopted siblings were seized by the state last year.

The Daily News reported the couple was convicted of first-degree criminal mistreatment of the boy and third-degree criminal mistreatment of his sister.

They face four to five years in prison at sentencing Aug. 23, prosecutor James Smith said. The prosecution alleged the couple also denied food to three other adopted girls. However, the judge acquitted the Trebilcocks of those charges, finding there was insufficient evidence to prove criminal mistreatment. All five children are now in foster homes.

The couple declined comment. Throughout the trial, they denied starving any of their children.

Evans heard from nearly 50 witnesses during a two-week trial.

The judge said he believes the couple was reckless and criminally negligent, but did not act in malice.

"I think the Trebilcocks love their children. I don't think there's any question of that," he said.

However, he added the couple, both of whom have struggled with obesity, appear to have developed a "warped" and "twisted" view of food.

The adopted children testified they were not allowed to eat breakfast unless their chores were done and that their parents severely punished them for wetting their beds or other violations of the family rules.

"Food was used as a carrot and also a punishment," Evans said. "This combination of food and punishment and accidents and disobedience all got wrapped up together."

When Rebecca Trebilcock took the 13-year-old boy to a pediatrician March 1, 2011, he weighed 49 pounds, about half the weight of a normal 13-year-old, and had hypothermia, severe eczema and an extremely low heart rate.

Seattle Toxic Spill Temporarily Shuts I-5

SEATTLE (AP) — A toxic spill from a tanker truck closed the northbound lanes of Interstate 5 through Seattle for more than an hour Wednesday afternoon, backing up traffic.

The Seattle Fire Department says the spill, originally estimated at 50 gallons, is about two gallons of a sodium borohydride and sodium hydroxide solution. The chemicals are used for bleaching pulp and wood products.

All northbound lanes of I-5 were closed just before 2 p.m. and two lanes reopened around 3:15 p.m. A third lane reopened about 4 p.m., easing the backup. Fire crews spread sand on the spill and worked with state Ecology Department officials on the cleanup.

Fire Department spokesman Kyle Moore says a person would definitely not want to breathe the spilled substance. He says the truck driver stopped when he noticed something leaking from his 5,000-gallon truck.

Missing Mason County Girl Found Safe

SEATTLE (AP) — A 16-year-old girl thought to have been abducted from her home in a small Washington town was found safe Wednesday, hours after an Amber alert was issued.

The Mason County sheriff's office had issued the alert Wednesday morning after Vivian Gaspar-Guerrero's parents said they found her missing from their home in Shelton. The girl's room was in disarray, with the window open and the screen cut.

But by late afternoon, the girl was found in Olympia, which is about 25 miles southeast from Shelton, authorities said.

"At this point in time, I can tell you she's safe and being interviewed by a detective," said Chief Criminal Deputy Dean Byrd. "We know absolutely it was not an abduction."

Few details were released. Byrd said earlier that authorities had reasons to believe the missing teen had been abducted, sparking a wide search with deputies canvassing the neighborhood near the town of Shelton, about 45 miles southwest of Seattle. The FBI and the Washington State Patrol had also joined the search.

Woman Injured Walking Through Glass Window at Bank

RIDGEFIELD (AP) — A fire official in the southwest Washington community of Ridgefield says a 32-year-old woman walked through a glass window at a bank. She suffered multiple non-life-threatening cuts.

Clark County Fire & Rescue Battalion Chief Tim Dawdy tells The Columbian that the woman mistook the window for a door. He says she stuck her hand out and walked through it at full speed Wednesday.

Firefighters treated her cuts and she drove away.

Dawdy says employees at the Sterling Bank branch were very surprised.

State Announces New Rain Runoff Regulations

SEATTLE (AP) — Washington state will begin requiring municipalities, including Centralia, to use "rain gardens" and pervious pavement in new urban developments to combat rainwater pollution to the state's rivers and lakes and to the Puget Sound, officials announced Wednesday.

The new "low-impact development" practices will be phased in over the next few years in an attempt to minimize the fiscal impact on local governments, the state Department of Ecology said. "Storm water is the No. 1 water pollution problem for populated areas," said Ted Sturdevant, director of Ecology.

The requirements will be in use by June 2015 in Seattle and Tacoma, as well as King, Snohomish, Pierce and Clark counties. That will be followed with less populated areas, which will begin employing the new standards by the end of 2016. Other areas have different timelines. Centralia, which is the only municipality covered in the greater Lewis County area, has until June 2017.

Rain gardens are planted depressions featuring soil and shrubs that allow rainwater runoff to soak into the ground. Pervious pavement also allows runoff to filter into the soil.

"It's a whole lot easier and cheaper to prevent runoff and pollution as we plan our developments, than to try to manage storm water after the fact," Sturdevant said.

Rain runoff that's not absorbed tends to pick up pollutants as it makes its way into streams, then into rivers, lakes or the Puget Sound.

Under the new initiative, the state will monitor how the new practices work. The new rules primarily affect new developments.

Sobe-Toyota Bows Out of AAA State Tournament

SO CLOSE: Sobe-Toyota Rallies From Five-Run Deficit but Double Play Ends Great Season

By The Chronicle

SELAH — Despite a furious ninth-inning rally by Sobe-Toyota, Kennewick came away with the 13-10 victory to knock the Lizards out of the American Legion AAA State Tournament here on Tuesday.

The bats were working for Sobe-Toyota, as they jumped out to an early 5-0 lead in the first and ended the game with 16 hits. However, Kennewick matched them much of the way. In the bottom of the sixth, the Tri-Cities squad scored 4 runs, then scored 2 in the seventh and 1 in the eighth to take the 13-7 lead.

The Lizards showed plenty of fight, though, scoring 3 runs in the top of the ninth but fell short of lengthening their season with a win. Sobe-Toyota loaded the bases with one out before a hard hit ball one-hopped to Kennewick's second baseman for a double play to end the game.

"Unfortunately Kennewick got a few more hits than us today," Sobe-Toyota coach Jake LeDuc said. "The loss wasn't for a lack of effort from the kids, they worked hard today."

Dominic Angwood pitched until the sixth inning for the Lizards and Brandon Conradi came in to pitch as a reliever.

"Dominic gave us everything we had and so did Brandon," LeDuc said. "Those two will be important players for us next year."

Ty Housden collected four hits and two RBIs to lead Sobe-Toyota. Dugan Shirer had two hits. Mason Musselman, Andrew Elam and Keylen Steen hit

KELSO — Twin Cities didn't let off the pedal in their two first games at the 15-year-old Pacific Northwest Regional Babe Ruth Tournament, outscoring their opponents by a combined 31-0 mark. Daniel Blomdahl went the distance on Wednesday as Twin Cities downed Wyoming 19-0 in their second game. Blomdahl allowed just four hits while his team notched 15.

The Hub and Mint City boys scored a run in the first and second inning, then exploded for 9 runs in the third inning. Twin Cities collected six hits in that frame and Wyoming committed one error.

They didn't let up after that, scoring 3 runs in the fourth and 5 in the fifth.

"We changed our approach from the first game of the tournament," Twin Cities manager Kyle Knudvig said. "We were a lot more aggressive on the first pitch fastball and we were able to hit it up the middle."

Twin Cities had four extra-base hits in the game.

Babe Ruth: Undeefeated 14s 10-Run Southern Oregon in Regional Opener

GREAT RUN: 14s Continue to Knock Around Competition, Defeat Southern Oregon 15-5

By The Chronicle

THE DALLES, OR — To say these guys are good would be a huge understatement.

The Twin Cities 14-year-olds picked up a 15-5 victory over Southern Oregon of Coos Bay at the Babe Ruth Pacific Northwest Regional Tournament here on Wednesday.

The Hub and Mint City boys collected 11 hits in the victory and remained undefeated in postseason play.

Twin Cities has also won a district and state title this summer.

After Southern Oregon took the early 1-0 lead in the first inning, Twin Cities answered back with a sac fly by Nolan Wasson. After Southern Oregon scored 2 runs in the fourth, Twin Cities rallied for 6 runs in the bottom of the frame. Pinch hitter Fletcher Brown had a two-RBI single to tie the game up and his squad went on to take the 7-3 lead.

After Brown tied it up, Twin Cities had four straight hits.

Southern Oregon would score 2 more runs, but Twin Cities plated 8 runs in the fifth to end the game on the 10-run rule. Wasson had a 3-RBI triple and Jeff Teresky had a 2-RBI walk-off single to enforce the mercy rule.

"We hit the ball very well," Twin Cities manager Kevin Wasson said. "We had a lot of balls in the grass."

Southern Oregon committed three errors in the game, while Twin Cities was flawless in the field.

At the plate, Wasson finished the game 2 for 3 and Jordan Wood was 2 for 4. Both of Wood's base hits came in the fourth.

The 14s were anchored by Jake Sutton on the mound. Sutton went 4 2/3 innings, before Brody Holcomb came in and recorded an out in the fifth.

"Jake pitched a good game and he grinded things out," Wasson said.

Chase Evinger caught the game until the fourth and Kolby Steen got behind the plate in the fourth.

Twin Cities is coming off a state tournament where they outscored the opposition 51-13 will face the Idaho state champions, Lewis and Clark, on Thursday 10 a.m.

George Mitchell to Oversee Named Penn State Watchdog

PHILADELPHIA (MCT) — George Mitchell, the former U.S. senator who has headed investigations into both baseball's steroid problems and an Olympic scandal that threatened the 2002 Winter Games, was named a watchdog for Penn State's athletics program Wednesday. The NCAA appointed Mitchell as its Athletics Integrity Monitor at Penn State. Mitchell's work, preparing a quarterly progress report for the NCAA, Big Ten Conference and the university's board of trustees and recommending changes in university procedures, will begin immediately, the NCAA said in a release, and will continue for five years.

"I enter this engagement mindful of the fact that this tragedy has deeply affected many lives, starting, of course, with the victims and their families," Mitchell said.

Centralia Little League Ends Season at State Tournament

FINISHING STRONG: 11-12-Year Olds Defeat Burlington Edison in First Game of State Tournament

By The Chronicle

WALLA WALLA — The Centralia 11-12-year-old Little League squad picked up a victory at the state tournament on Saturday, July 21, before bowing out with losses on Sunday and Monday. The Hub City squad defeated Burlington Edison 10-4, then fell to Walla Walla 14-4 and Glenwood 4-0.

Against Burlington Edison, Josh Dixon hit a home run and a 2-RBI double while Salzar Lopez had an RBI triple and Nat Lopez drove in another run. The game was 5-4 until the fifth inning, when Centralia exploded for 5 runs.

On Sunday, Walla Walla handed the Hub City boys a 14-4 loss despite a 2-RBI single by Isiah Trevino. Brock Selstrom had two singles in the game as well. Dixon had a hit and an RBI.

“Walla Walla came out and was hitting on all cylinders,” coach Greg Wasson said. “We had a lot of runners on base, we just couldn’t capitalize on them.”

Centralia fell to Glenwood 4-0 in a pitcher’s dual on Sunday. Scott Bonagofski went 5 $\frac{2}{3}$ innings and allowed just three hits.

The game was scoreless until the third. Glenwood got a baserunner because of an error and then collected two walks. Ryan Jensen then robbed a batter of a grand slam with a great jump by the fence.

“It was a legitimate rob,” Wasson said. “That was a highlight.”

However, the next batter up hit a grand slam and the game would end with the final score 4-0.

“We just couldn’t get the timely hit,” Wasson said.

Conner Wasson had one hit in the first inning and Bonagofski notched a hit in the fourth for Centralia. The Hub City squad finished the season with a District 3 Little League Title and an appearance in the state tournament.

“We ended the season as one of the top ten teams in the state,” Wasson said. “It was great being able to represent Centralia.”

Wasson also wanted to thank the community for the financial support to help the team make it to the state tournament.

Twin Cities’ Jacob Monohon slides into second base in the first inning of his team’s matchup against the Madison Mudcats at the 15-year-old Pacific Northwest Babe Ruth Regional Tournament on Tuesday.

plate, going 3 for 5 and driving in four RBI. Blomdahl helped his own cause by going 2 for 4 with an RBI at the plate as well.

The win made Twin Cities one of two undefeated teams in their group for pool play, and a win today should guarantee them a spot in the semifinals. The run differential should also give the local squad an advantage in tiebreaker situations for No. 1 and 2 seeds.

“That’s why you come out and throw down the hammer,” Knudsvig said.

Knudsvig added that his players have approached the tournament the right way mentally.

“I’ve got a good group of kids here,” Knudsvig said. “They stayed focused. They’re a bunch of gamers.”

Twin Cities opened up the regional tournament with a bang, defeating the Madison Mudcats 12-0 here on Tuesday at Tam O’Shanter Park behind a big performance from starting pitcher Drew Fagerness.

Fagerness was perfect on the mound through three innings. In the bottom of the fourth, Madison hit a dribbler that went foul, then bounced off the lip back into fair territory to get the Mudcats’ one hit of the game. The Twin Cities hurler finished with seven strikeouts over four innings of work.

“Drew did an excellent job,” Twin Cities manager Kyle Knudsvig said. “He was a little nervous before the first pitch but got it done out there.”

Twin Cities got on the board in the top of the first with a flurry. Max Dulin and Fagerness both drove in runs in the frame, and a wild pitch allowed Jacob Monohon to score.

“That’s the most important thing, is getting off to a good start,” Knudsvig said. “You’ve got to come out with intensity and the dugout had a good feeling this evening. Our defense set the tone and Max made a great play in the first inning that got things going.”

Twin Cities didn’t commit an error in the game.

The Mint and Hub City boys added 5 runs in the third. Twin Cities loaded the bases to start the rally and benefitted from two walked-in runs and another brought in by a hit batter. J.T. Yarter and Ryan Steepy also drove in runs.

Twin Cities continued to roll in the fourth inning, loading the bases with one out.

In the fourth inning, Twin Cities continued to roll. Again, the team loaded the bases with one out to get things going. J.C. Cleary, Gavin Kerner and Steepy drove in runs, while Yarter scored when the Mudcats tagged out a player stealing second base.

In the bottom of the fifth, Brandon Davis came in and shut the door with two strikeouts, a walk and a groundout.

Yarter stroked a double, while Steepy, Cleary and Kerner had 2 RBIs apiece. Twin Cities will face Montana tomorrow at 4:30 p.m. in an attempt to stay undefeated in pool play.

“They’re a lot tougher team,” Knudsvig said. “They should be a challenge for us.”

Olympics

Bremerton’s Adrian Wins Swimming Gold

GOLDEN: Nathan Adrian Wins Men’s 100-Meter Freestyle in London

By The Seattle Times

Bremerton’s Nathan Adrian got the gold, and his mother got the bouquet.

The 23-year-old American swimmer earned his first individual gold medal Wednesday, coming from behind with a furious finish in the men’s 100-meter freestyle at the Olympic Games to win by a fingertip.

The margin of victory — one-hundredth of a second — was the tightest at the London Olympics.

If the finish was dramatic, the reaction from the usually laid-back Adrian was even better — must-see TV for an international audience. He pounded the water like a depth charge in celebration, raised his fist, then put his head in his hand as the enormity of this golden moment sank in.

On the awards podium, Adrian accepted his medal and a bouquet of flowers, then listened to the national anthem. Afterward he smiled, waved and blew kisses to his parents, who were among several family members watching.

Finally, Adrian ran to his parents and handed the flowers to his mother, Cecilia.

How does the spotlight feel for a Washington native who has largely been overshadowed at these Games by American swim stars Michael Phelps, Ryan Lochte and Missy Franklin?

“It feels good,” Adrian told reporters, before glancing up at a TV monitor and seeing Rebecca Soni of the U.S. win her semifinal race in record time.

“Whoa, Reb, has just broken a world record,” Adrian announced. “I’m overshadowowed by Reb setting a world record.”

His U.S. teammates watched in the “ready room” as Adrian became the first American to win swimming’s signature event at an Olympics in 24 years.

“We watched it and just went nuts,” Lochte said. “We were screaming and everything. That was one of the greatest finishes. We’re so happy for him.”

Adrian was third at the 50-meter turn. He needed every bit of his 6-foot-6 frame to finish in 47.52 seconds and edge favorite James “The Missile” Magnussen of Australia as the pair churned to the finish side by side. Adrian was in Lane 5, and Magnussen in Lane 4.

Canada’s Brent Hayden earned the bronze medal in a time of 47.80 at the Aquatics Centre.

Adrian described his emotions after the tight finish.

“I kind of touched well and (thought), ‘Oh, sweet, I’ve won.’ Then there’s 10 to 15 seconds, (and) ‘Holy crap, this is the Olympics,’” he told reporters. “I’ve been watching this since I was a kid.”

Adrian said he tried not to think about the importance of the race, and that realization was why he buried his face in his hand.

“I don’t like to put pressure on myself,” he said. “You can probably tell on my face, ‘Oh, sweet, I won the heat,’ and then it took a minute and, ‘Oh, wait, it’s the Olympics.’”

That it is, and now America is asking: Who is this guy?

He’s a kid who starting swimming at age 5, carried along by a brother (Justin) who swam for the University of Washington before it disbanded its program, and a sister (Donella) who swam for Arizona State. His mother, who was born in Hong Kong, is a nurse for the Bremerton School District, and his father Jim is a retired nuclear engineer for the Puget Sound Naval Shipyard. Nathan wants to be a doctor.

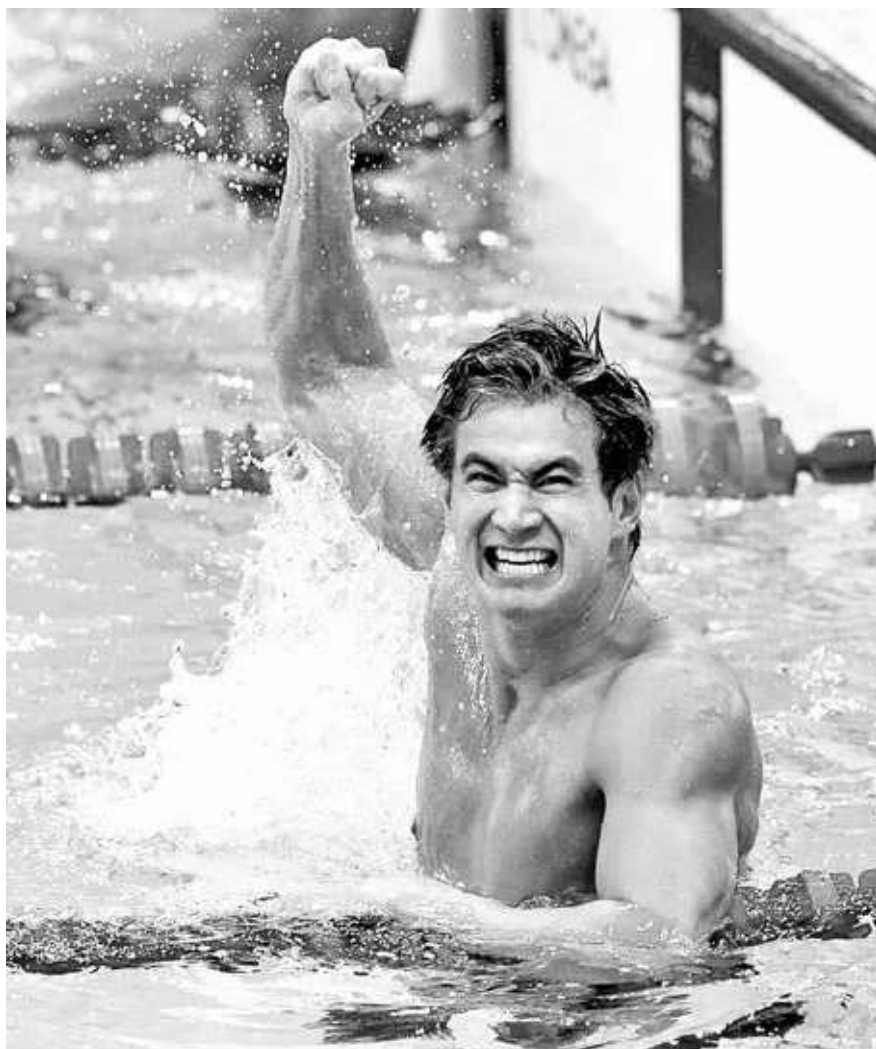

You might be surprised to know that Adrian has won Olympic gold before, but as a bit player at the 2008 Beijing Games. Then only 19, Adrian swam in preliminaries and wasn’t in the finals as Phelps led a U.S. victory in the 400 free relay. Still, Adrian got a medal.

He earned a silver medal in the same event Sunday, swimming an impressive leadoff leg in a head-to-head matchup with Magnussen that gave the U.S. the early lead. But France stunned the Americans for the gold with a sensational final leg by Yannick Agnel.

This time no one could take this golden moment away, however. The cool kid who once swam for Bremerton High School and later won NCAA championships at the University of California Berkeley is suddenly in the spotlight, whether he likes it or not.

a pair of singles, and added a double apiece. Steen also drove in a run.

The Lizards finished the season with a 28-14 record. LeDuc added he would like to thank the team’s sponsor, Sobe-Toyota and the coaches, parents and fans that supported the team throughout the summer. He said that donations by some individual allowed the Lizards to have a team dinner at the state tournament.

“Overall for the season I couldn’t be more proud of these guys,” LeDuc said. “Nobody complained about their playing time or their roles. The 14 guys on the roster all contributed throughout the season. This has been one of the most fun summers, I’m just glad I could be a part of it.”

7 Wins to Smile About

Elaine Thompson / The Associated Press

Seattle Mariners' Eric Thames is congratulated in the dugout following his two-run home run against the Toronto Blue Jays in the fifth inning of a baseball game, Wednesday, in Seattle.

SWEET: Mariners Get Second Series Sweep in a Row With 5-3 Victory Over Blue Jays on Wednesday

By Geoff Baker
The Seattle Times

SEATTLE — It seems like just yesterday Mariners manager Eric Wedge used the word “dumb” as a possibility for why his hitters were unable to make in-game adjustments.

Now, seven consecutive victories and counting, the adjustments are coming fast and furious, and against some pretty good pitchers. Of course, it helps in games like this 5-3 comeback victory Wednesday night over the Toronto Blue Jays when newcomer Eric Thames can hit a towering shot over the center-field wall.

But while the Thames blast propelled the Mariners back into the contest, it took continued offense and pressure by his teammates to extend this winning streak longer than any by the team in five years.

“I think we’re getting nice, timely hits,” said John Jaso, who drove home the go-ahead run in the sixth after Thames tied it in the fifth. “We’re getting hits with runners on base and those things are what make you grab the win.”

They got the hits in this one on a night when previously-unbeaten Toronto starter Carlos Villanueva looked like he would make the Mariners his pet as so many other pitchers have done this year. Early home runs by Colby Rasmus in the first and Kelly Johnson in the fourth helped Villanueva to a 3-1 lead as he rolled into the fifth with just two singles allowed.

But then the Mariners began to pick up on the off-speed stuff he threw early in counts. One turn through the order, they began to connect with more frequency.

Then, with Thames up for his second Seattle at-bat in the fifth, the term “connect” took on an entirely different meaning. With two out and Mike Carp on base, Thames ignited the Safeco Field crowd of 22,537 with a towering drive that traveled an estimated 411 feet and landed well beyond the center-field wall, tying the score at 3.

Those who have watched the Mariners at home all season don’t often see balls blasted that deep, to that part of the ballpark. Especially not off the bat of someone from a Mariners team that has struggled to hit at home most of the year.

“I went into the homerless territory, as everyone says,” said Thames, acquired from Toronto on Monday for pitcher Steve Delabar.

Thames and Villanueva — who came in 6-0 with a 2.92 earned-run average — teamed in Class AAA together for a good part of the past two seasons.

“It’s different when you’re playing behind somebody and then facing him,” Thames said. “Because I knew his off-speed is plus-plus and that he likes to locate. Guys like that are tough in general, so I looked at video, I talked to (Michael) Saunders and some of the other guys and we collaborated on approaches.”

Saunders kept the momentum going with a one-out double ripped off the right-field wall in the sixth. Jaso came up next — having struck out twice his first two times up — and singled to center to put Seattle up 4-3.

“We kind of knew that coming into the game that he was going to come with a lot of off-speed stuff,” Jaso said. “His fast-ball was kind of like his fourth pitch.”

Blake Beavan began adjusting to Toronto hitters a bit better as the game wore on. He escaped a fifth inning jam thanks to a Blue Jays baserunning error, then retired seven of his final eight batters once Thames tied it for Seattle.

“So many people talk about how we don’t score runs at home and we’re not getting the job done at home,” said Beavan. “But I think we’ve kind of turned that around here and kind of taken it upon ourselves to pick it up and do better. To take more accountability and go out there and play like there’s no tomor-

There might be only two months of tomorrows ahead for a team buried too deep in last place to make any type of post-season run. But this fun week of baseball at least doesn’t have Wedge questioning his hitters’ intelligence anymore when it comes to adjusting in-game.

“The ability to make an adjustment, people think about it from game-to-game, but really it needs to be at-bat-to-at-bat,” Wedge said. “And eventually from pitch-to-pitch as these guys get further along. And they’re all moving, for the most part, in the right direction.”

In Constant Pursuit of Excellence, Sounders Find a Good Fit in Christian Tiffert

For the Sounders FC, life is incredible and impossible. At only 3 ½ years old, the Major League Soccer team already is a consistent source of pride in a Seattle sports scene still on the mend from a disastrous end to the past decade. The Sounders aren’t just novel and cool anymore. They’re a model franchise with a sterling track record. Incredible.

By Jerry Brewer
Seattle Times

But that reputation comes with the burden of having to outdo yourself, which is the tough part of life. They have an entertaining product, an enviable bond with the community, a playoff-laden history and even three consecutive U.S. Open Cup championships.

The league title, the MLS Cup, is missing, though. We’d call it elusive, but they’ve only had three shots at it, and how many teams have ever gone from birth to king before they reach kindergarten age? Impossible.

This is the Sounders’ life, though, one of unfathomable highs and lows that only seem low because they’ve never had to ask for patience or perspective.

They’re way ahead of the game, yet their standard is so high that it feels they’re almost overdue. This season, in only 21 matches, the joy and the jostling have alternated like crazy.

There was the nine-match stretch of beauty to start the season in which the Sounders went 7-1-1 despite injuries and the need to integrate some new talented pieces. And then there was the nine-match winless streak that produced a 0-4-5 record and spanned nearly two months and left the masses as dissatisfied and worried about the team as they’ve ever been.

In a year of extremes, the Sounders were certain to adjust the roster in a significant way, and they did that last week with the acquisition of German midfielder Christian Tiffert. To bring him aboard as a designated player, they had to lose one of their most talented (and increasingly erratic) players, midfielder Alvaro Fernandez, a designated player who was traded to the Chicago Fire. The roster shuffle also created enough salary cap space to bring in 23-year-old Honduran midfielder Mario Martinez on loan from Real Espana.

On paper, it appears to be a shrewd move to stabilize a team that has enough talent to win the MLS Cup. In Tiffert, the Sounders now have a player who fits the prototype of what they need to improve.

“He’s a very simple player,” said Sounders FC coach Sigi Schmid, meaning Tiffert plays within himself. “He plays one- and two-touch, but he has very good vision.”

Tiffert is adequate defensively, but at his best, he’s an assists machine who could really help the offense flourish. Just as important are his intangibles: He’s a leader and a veteran who should be dependable in a postseason environment. And at age 30, he’s still in his prime.

“It depends not on what you speak,” Tiffert said when asked how he could help the Sounders. “It depends on the action on the field.”

Tiffert is the sixth designated player in franchise history. The others are a mixed bag of long-term successes (Fredy Montero, Mauro Rosales, Fernandez), short-term successes turned sour (Fredie Ljungberg) and the absolute wrong fit (Blaise Nkufo). The Sounders have learned many lessons with designated players, especially when it comes to high-profile imports. Tiffert is a very good talent, but he also seems to be the kind of player who will be a unifying presence.

Adrian Hanauer, the team’s general manager and part owner, is naturally meticulous in making moves, and the front office has made a thoughtful decision.

Now, the Sounders just need it to look good on the field.

“We’ve had 3 ½ very good years, but we’re always going to try to get better,” Hanauer said. “If we hadn’t gone through that bad stretch of nine games, do things maybe end up a little differently? That’s a fair question. But even if we hadn’t gone through that, we were still going to be looking.”

Schmid cautioned that the MLS is a notoriously streaky league, so experiencing bookends of best and worst aren’t that shocking. Still, the fact the Sounders saw those extremes provided clarity of how fickle things could be with this roster.

So, they had to make an impactful change.

If Tiffert gets acclimated quickly, then perhaps the only thing missing in the Sounders’ incredible life won’t be such an impossibly ambitious pursuit. And even if they don’t win the MLS Cup this year, the Sounders continue to be set up for more playoff appearances in the future. In professional sports, sustained success often results in the ultimate prize.

“If you continue to have success, it’s sort of like turning a microscope over. All your problems seem real far away,” Schmid said. “Our league is a streaky league, and the highs and the lows, that can benefit us. Even when we were struggling, our players never lost faith. If anything, their belief grew stronger that we’re capable and have the makeup to win a championship.”

Acquiring Tiffert isn’t a statement that the Sounders are going for it this year. It’s a reiteration that they’re always going for it.

For sure, they’re a different kind of Seattle sports team. Incredible. Impossible. Incomparable.

1 SHE'S A KEEPER The car Jimmie Johnson won with at Dover in June was the same piece that propelled him to victory at Indianapolis. Johnson led 289 of 400 laps at Dover and 99 of 160 at the Brickyard. Johnson's crew chief, Chad Knaus, said they'll roll it out again at Chicagoland, the first race of the Chase.

Though hardly comparable, open-wheelers A.J. Foyt, Rick Mears and Al Unser Sr. are also four-time winners at the Brickyard, though their wins came in the Indianapolis 500. Michael Schumacher bests them all with five IMS wins in Formula One.

3 CONTOVERSIAL DEBUT Brad Keselowski won the Nationwide Series inaugural event at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, the Indiana 250. Keselowski inherited the lead when Elliott Sadler was black flagged when NASCAR deemed he jumped a restart with 17 laps to go, a ruling Sadler and his team disagreed with. "This is a tough one to swallow," Sadler said. "Today my heart was definitely ripped out of my chest."

Dominant Win on the Big Stage

Jimmie Johnson pummels field, wins fourth Brickyard 400

Jimmie Johnson crosses the finish line at Indianapolis Motor Speedway in front of the track's famed pagoda.

By MATT TALIAFERRO
Athlon Sports Racing Editor

It took Jimmie Johnson only 29 laps to steer his No. 48 Chevrolet to the front of the field in Sunday's Brickyard 400. Once there, he rarely looked back, leading 99 of the final 131 laps to score his fourth Sprint Cup Series win at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

Johnson, who qualified sixth, also gave Chevrolet its 10th straight win at the famed auto racing venue, while team owner Rick Hendrick scored his eighth win at IMS in NASCAR's 19 visits.

"I knew (the) second or third lap yesterday on the track that we were going to have an awfully good chance at winning," Johnson said of Saturday's first practice session. "That confidence that I had helped us through practice yesterday. There were a couple moments where maybe an adjustment didn't work and we lost a little pace, but I just had a feeling, and I just knew we were going to be fine."

"We qualified well and then went out there today and put it on them, so ... solid performance."

Johnson beat Kyle Busch to the line by a race record 4.758 seconds. Greg Biffle, Dale Earnhardt Jr. and Jeff Gordon rounded out the top 5. Johnson's only real competition — Denny Hamlin (sixth) and Brad Keselowski (ninth) — led a total of 49 laps but faded late.

Johnson's third win of the season ties him with Keselowski and Tony Stewart for most on the circuit.

Johnson's previous three Brickyard wins also coincided with three of his four Cup titles (2006, '08 and '09).

"I feel that from a performance standpoint, we're as strong as we've ever been," Johnson said. "We've had issues late in a race that's cost us track position for a variety of reasons, and that's the part that we need to make sure is buttoned up before the Chase starts and carry that through the Chase."

"But from a performance standpoint, these are amazing racecars. We've made a lot of progress through the off-season and then getting started this year. I feel really good about the Chase — I'm ready for it to start."

Johnson's shop mate at Hendrick Motorsports, Earnhardt, ascended to the top of the Sprint Cup championship standings thanks to a fourth-place showing. The previous points leader, Matt Kenseth, was swept up in a wreck on lap 134 of 160 and finished 35th.

"You can't win the championship until you lead the points," said Earnhardt's crew chief, Steve Letarte. "To lead at any time in the season, especially this late in the season, proves this team is capable of winning a championship."

"We definitely haven't hit our stride yet. There's still room for improvement."

"We need to win more races," Earnhardt added. "If we want to win the championship, we have to. I imagine we can win a couple races in the Chase. I don't know if finishing fourth or fifth (each week) is going to do it."

Based upon the final aerodynamic test results from July 18, NASCAR has announced that all four of its Original Equipment Manufacturers have met the necessary targets for the 2013 NASCAR Sprint Cup Series racecar. This means manufacturers (Chevrolet, Dodge, Ford and Toyota) can begin making parts and pieces for the new models.

The four new models — Chevrolet's SS, Dodge's Charger, Ford's Fusion and Toyota's Camry — will make their race debuts in the 2013 Daytona 500. The designs are truer to each manufacturers' street models, a trend NASCAR strayed from with the introduction of the common-tem-plate "Car of Tomorrow" in 2007.

Also making news in the model department, is Chevrolet, which announced it will campaign its popular Camaro model in the Nationwide Series next season. Chevy had elected to run the Impala nameplate since dropping its Monte Carlo line at the conclusion of the 2007 season.

The Nationwide Series now boasts three "muscle car" models, as Chevy's Camaro joins the Ford Mustang and the Dodge Challenger. Toyota will continue to run the Camry brand.

News & Notes

Athlon Sports Horsepower Rankings

1. Jimmie Johnson	Johnson has had two crashes in 2012, resulting in 42nd- and 36th-place finishes and one engine failure, leading to a 35th-place run. Otherwise, he's been 12th or better every week.
2. Dale Earnhardt Jr.	Junior has been nearly as good as his Hendrick teammate this year, with 17th- and 23rd-place runs the only blemishes outside of the top 15 through 20 races.
3. Matt Kenseth	Even before a crash ended his day in Indy, Kenseth wasn't having a banner performance. How will this team handle its driver's lame duck status down the stretch?
4. Denny Hamlin	Hamlin is certainly back to his contender status, with two wins on the season and three finishes of sixth or better in the last four races (including a near-miss in Loudon).
5. Tony Stewart	Stewart somehow snuck into the top 10 by day's end at Indy despite being a non-factor throughout the race. In fact, it was his worst showing (10th) at IMS since forming his own team.
6. Brad Keselowski	Along with Hamlin, Keselowski seemed the only driver with anything for Johnson. A slow pit stop doomed his chances and the three-time winner in 2012 settled for ninth.
7. Kasey Kahne	Front-end damage to Kahne's Chevy forced the team to play catch-up all day in Indy. A popular pre-race pick, Kasey persevered to a 12th-place showing.
8. Greg Biffle	After a quiet three-race stretch where Biffle was all but invisible, he burst back onto the scene at the Brickyard with a confidence-building third-place finish.
9. Jeff Gordon	Time is running out for Gordon, who finds himself a distant 15th in the point standings with zero wins. Try as they might, the 24 team has been a fifth- to sixth-place car the last six weeks.
10. Clint Bowyer	Rebounded from what appeared to be some ugly sheet metal damage prior to the halfway mark at Indy to post a respectable 15th. It could've been worse.
11. Martin Truex Jr.	Indy was a typical run for Truex in 2012: Quality in the mid-teens and finish about eighth.
12. Kyle Busch	Up to 11th in the standings and currently a wild-card qualifier after a runner-up at the Brickyard.
13. Ryan Newman	Fifteen points behind Busch in the wild card standings with a single win. It can be done.
14. Kevin Harvick	Averaging an 11.7-place finish — which Harvick has thus far — won't win him a title.
15. Mark Martin	Had he started every race this year, Martin would slot in around 13th or 14th in the point standings.

Just off the lead pack: Marcos Ambrose, Carl Edwards, Joey Logano, Jamie McMurray, Paul Menard

It took a lot of persuading from Daddy to get little Genevieve Johnson to kiss the bricks.

Tracks on Tap

- SPRINT CUP SERIES
Track: Pocono Raceway
Race: Pennsylvania 400
Location: Long Pond, Pa.
When: Sunday, Aug. 5
TV: ESPN (12:00 p.m. EST)
Layout: 2.5-mile tri-oval
Banking/Turn 1: 14 degrees
Banking/Turn 2: 8 degrees
Banking/Turn 3: 6 degrees
June Winner: Joey Logano
Crew Chief's Take: "We used to wear tires out and the pace would fall off a great deal, but with the repave that should change. Because of the new pavement, speeds will be really high with the longest straightaway we visit. Typical Pocono setups are based around being able to get through the bumps in turn 1 and being able to turn in turn 3 while trying to maintain forward drive. All of that will be changed when we get there with the new pavement."
- NATIONWIDE SERIES

Classic Moments

- Pocono Raceway
How's this for a classic 1980s top 5: Tim Richmond, Darrell Waltrip, Bobby Allison, Neil Bonnett and Harry Gant. The five greats combined to lead 185 of 200 laps in the Lake Coia 500 on July 24, 1983, at Pocono Raceway.
- Richmond, driving the Raymond Beadle-owned Old Milwaukee Pontiac, started from the pole and swapped the lead with numerous drivers on numerous occasions throughout the day, as no driver led more than 14 consecutive laps.
- Richmond was able to get the jump on Waltrip's No. 11 Pepsi Challenger on a restart on lap 194. He held serve from there, recording his first NASCAR superspeedway win.
- While the record for lead changes at Pocono was set in 1979 (56), the 41 witnessed on this day haven't been topped since.

Athlon Fantasy Stall

Looking at Checkers: It's hard to ignore Denny Hamlin's two wins and two fifth-place finishes over the last six Pocono visits.

Pretty Solid Pick: Jimmie Johnson has three consecutive fourth-place finishes in the Pennsylvania mountains.

Good Sleeper Pick: Mark Martin ran a close second to Joey Logano here in June.

Runs on Seven Cylinders: Martin Truex Jr. has been consistent this year, but Pocono hasn't been kind.

Insider Tip: If Jeff Gordon's luck is going to change, this is the track where it will happen.

Washington State head coach Mike Leach calls a timeout to work with backup quarterback Cody Clements during the Crimson and Gray spring college football game in Spokane, Wash.

Washington State Opens Camp on Thursday

NEW LOOK: Mike Leach Takes the Helm of the Cougars For 2012 Season

By Nicholas K. Geranos
The Associated Press

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — New Washington State coach Mike Leach wants to take his team back to junior high as fall drills open on Thursday.

Leach said Wednesday that he plans to emphasize blocking and tackling in the first week of practice as the Cougars seek to improve on a 4-8 season that ended with coach Paul Wulff getting fired.

“Whoever was your junior high coach, virtually everything he told you we are going to emphasize big time,” Leach said in a conference call with reporters. “The most important skill on offense is blocking. The most important skill on defense is tackling.”

“The fundamentals never go (away),” Leach said.

Leach, the colorful coach who turned Texas Tech into a football power before he was fired in 2009, has had a busy summer — going bear hunting and attending actor Matthew McConaughey’s wedding, among other activities. But the focus in Pullman now turns to football.

One of the first personnel decisions Leach faces is whether to keep senior Jeff Tuel as the No. 1 quarterback or elevate backup Connor Halliday, a sophomore.

Both players will get plenty of reps, and then he plans to designate a No. 1 within the first week of practice.

Both quarterbacks are coming off injury-plagued seasons, and both would benefit from better play by WSU’s beleaguered offensive line. The line is more experienced this season, but still suffers from a lack of depth, Leach said.

The Cougars appear to be strongest at receiver, where star Marquess Wilson returns for his junior year. Also back are Bobby Ratliff, Bennett Bontemps, Gino Simone and there’s a slew of younger players led by touted freshman Gabriel Marks.

“There is not a lot of experience there,” Leach said. “We have to manufacture experience in camp.”

Veteran running backs Rickey Galvin and Carl Winston are back. Defensively, the line is suspect as three players who had been expected to contribute were dismissed from the team.

“You’ve got to put the interests of the team first,” Leach said.

Overall, Leach said the Cougars still lack depth behind their starters.

“Our first level guys I feel pretty good about,” Leach said. “We need depth pretty much everywhere.”

Most of fall camp will be devoted to developing skills, and the Cougars won’t start concentrating on season-opening opponent BYU until perhaps 10 days before the Sept. 1 opener.

“I don’t think you sit and game plan three months for one game and six days for every other game,” Leach said.

Leach said he has heard no more news regarding a proposed documentary television series about his first season at WSU. He also is finding remote Pullman, 75 miles south of Spokane, to his liking, and rejects any notion that he is seen as the savior of WSU football after being lured north by a $2 million contract.

“Pullman is a gorgeous place,”

Leach said. He added that the football program has a great legacy and he is “not the savior of anything.”

“I’ve got a great coaching staff and players to work with and we are going to do the best we can,” Leach said. “All anybody has is their best effort, and that’s what they are going to get out of us.”

After opening at Leach’s alma mater, the Cougars return home to face Eastern Washington on Sept. 8. Their Pac-12 home opener is Sept. 22 against Colorado.

Morton Hosts Double-Header of Fun

Chainsaws and Flying Monkeys: Loggers Jubilee, Roxy Playhouse Plan Showstoppers

By Carrina Stanton

For The Chronicle

From Tow Mater and chainsaws to ruby slippers and flying monkeys, the little town of Morton has some big fun planned this month.

The 70th annual Morton Loggers Jubilee will take place Aug. 9-12 while the Roxy Theater summer production of "Wizard of Oz" will overlap with a run starting Aug. 3 and running weekends through Aug. 12.

The Loggers Jubilee is arguably the largest happening for the town of about 1,100, drawing between 8,000-10,000 visitors each year.

Festival volunteer Sunny Evans, whose parents, Sonny and Linda Mettler, head the festival, said the motels are all booked at least eight to 10 months ahead and the rest of the visitors camp all over town.

"People kind of migrate in for it," Evans said. "Tuesday or Wednesday they start rolling into town and then it just grows and grows and grows."

The 70th year of Jubilee kicks off an effort to salute the longstanding supporters of the event with a theme of "Loggers' Jubilee: Living History... our 70th celebration". Former standout competitor and long-time jubilee supporter Kelly Stanley has been chosen to serve as this year's grand marshal.

"We're really trying to have it dedicated to those who have been a part of Jubilee for a long time," Linda Mettler said.

Another celebrity expected to join the Jubilee fun is a life-sized Tow Mater from the Disney/Pixar movie "Cars." He will be part of the parade Saturday and following the parade visitors can have their photos taken with him. Linda Mettler explained the character is owned by a nonprofit organization and a portion of each $10 photo sold will benefit Loggers Jubilee.

If you've never attended Loggers Jubilee, the Mettlers agreed that the grand parade, logging competitions and street dance are musts. But Sonny Mettler said one of his personal favorite events is the lawnmower races, which take place Friday evening.

"They're crazy," he said. "They have some amazing engines in these little things. It's like NASCAR but with lawnmowers."

Another exciting addition to this year's events will be the unveiling of the event's own American flag. In years past, Uhlmann Motors donated the use of their flag. But this year the Jubilee committee will unveil their own 30-foot by 60-foot flag. At retirement, the flag will be folded for storage by a group of Armed Service personnel from Fort Lewis.

The main event of the logging competitions draws competitors from all over the world to go head to head in events such as: springboard; single, double and obstacle buck; stock saw; hot saw; underhand chop; and both Jack 'N' Jill and Jill 'N' Jill. Perhaps one of the most loved events is the speed climb where contestants scramble both up and down an 80-foot spar tree in times ranging from 18-20 seconds.

"It's these things you don't see anymore, that you don't usually get to see," Linda Mettler said.

We're Not in Kansas Anymore

Though it may not exponentially increase the population of Morton, the Roxy's annual summer production is also a tourist attraction in its own right, said Lynne Olmos, who is directing this year's production of "Wizard of Oz." Olmos said theatergoers from Morton and surrounding areas usually flock to their summer show but they have also heard from many people who plan trips through East Lewis County to coincide with the annual production.

"A lot of people come out for our summer musical," Olmos said.

Presented in by Centralia College East and the Fire Mountain Arts Council, this year's production of "Wizard of Oz" will tell the story straight off the silver screen. Based on the classic motion picture of the same name, "The Dorothy Gale, played by Alesha Calleson, holds Toto as she sings "Somewhere Over the Rainbow" during a rehearsal of the "Wizard of Oz" at the Roxy Theater in Morton on July 24.

Morton: Munchkins Singing, Loggers Birling

"Wizard of Oz" tells the story of Kansas girl Dorothy Gale, played by Alesha Calleson, who goes through a tornado and lands in the fantastical world of Munchkinland.

Trying to find her way home, Dorothy encounters the Wicked Witch of the West, played by Heather Burnley, and the Good Witch of the North, played by Fiona Thornton. She travels the yellow brick road, trying to reach the land of Oz and find help returning home from the Wizard of Oz, played by Fred Schwindt. She finds help along the way from her new friends the scarecrow, played by Rebecca Byrd, the Tin Woodsman, played by Tanner Jones, and the Cowardly Lion, played by Bruce Roberts.

Olmos, a theater teacher at Mossyrock High School with more than 30 years experience both on and off the stage, said she had been wanting to do the show for years. She said she liked that it was a family-friendly story that really seems to have a universal appeal.

"A lot of people will be drawn to 'Wizard of Oz' because it's something from their own childhood," Olmos said. "It's a huge undertaking but we really like to do shows that bring out the family and this one is."

The challenges of this particular play include: working with a cast of nearly 30 ranging in ages from 5 to senior citizens; large-scale musical numbers; as well as working cinematic elements such as explosions, flying monkeys and witches brooms and a tornado into a small theater space with no fly space. Olmos said this show will include their first use of a trap door, some magical fire and explosions and some other new uses of the space.

"Every show we get into our heads that we want to do something a little challenging and this one is definitely going to be a challenge," Olmos said.

While many of the elements of the play are still being worked out, Olmos said she has a strong, musical cast and a story that is sure to please audiences. In the end, she said she is proud of how the show is shaping up and believes it will be a blockbuster.

"This is going to be one of those plays that if they miss it, they'll be sorry," Olmos said.

I would like to let you know about my awesome daughter who has joined the Lewis County Special Olympics of 2012. Her name is Shari Feinbach. We now live in Lewis County, not only to finish "The Ghost of Hangman's Bridge," but to have an awesome hands-on, all ages museum in Centralia.

For 28 years Shari has gone through hurdles with mental challenges since birth. She was in the Southern California Special Olympics for 6 years and while in high school, she has 42 medals and lots of ribbons in track and fields, swimming, softball, basketball, and yes, ice hockey.

Shari is now on the softball team, and what a team! Do they have a chance to win? Yes they can!

Local Veterans Honored With Biplane Ride

By Stephanie Wahl
Chehalis West Assisted Living

On July 16, Chehalis West Assisted Living residents Roy Long, 88, and Gary Van Auken, 65, were treated with a biplane ride by the Ageless Aviation Dreams foundation. Both gentlemen are veterans. Roy had been a hobby pilot for many years. They were both thanked for their service to our country, given hats from the organization and are still smiling over the experience.

Roy said, "I never knew how beautiful the Chehalis Valley is." Roy also asked the pilot, Darryl Fisher, if he could do some "loop-de-loops" and "barrel rolls."

The Ageless Aviation Dreams Foundation is a nonprofit organization established and dedicated to seniors and United States military veterans, living in long-term care communities that have always had a burning desire to soar like an eagle. For these "Golden" individuals, we provide the opportunity to experience the thrill of an Ageless Aviation Dreams Dream Flight that includes riding in the cockpit of a Boeing Stearman, the airplane used to train many military aviators in the late thirties and early forties.

Today, many of our former United States military pilots live in senior communities. We want to take them back to a place in time when they were invincible, ruling the sky as proud military aviators.

Ageless Aviation Dreams Foundation is dedicated to every senior, living and deceased that helped build this great nation. Let their memory live on in every Dream Flight flown from this day forward.

THE LONG VIEW: Glimpses of East County History

Soooooey! Southern Settlers Raised Porkers in the Big Bottom

Back in the 1880s, before Washington was a state, a group of settlers came out of the southern mountains in Kentucky and Tennessee and settled in eastern Lewis County. At that time, the Washington Territory was being rapidly settled by homesteaders, but most of them picked out likely places in the valleys and low uplands near Puget Sound and the main overland route between the Columbia River and Olympia. It was desirable to be near the roads and line of towns that correspond with today's Old Highway 99. It was possible to get supplies and market crops within a day's journey by wagon or horseback. The pioneers who came up from Kentucky and Tennessee, however, didn't hesitate to penetrate the densely forested wilderness of the western Cascades. They had been used to the isolated and pioneer life in the Cumberland Smoky mountains. In fact, the Cascade country of the upper Cowlitz looked so much like the mountains back in the South that very few of these southerners could pass them up as a place to settle. Thus, in 1885 and 1890 a very sizable colony of southerners inhabited the bottom lands way back in the mountains 50 to 60 miles by trail east from Chehalis. The way these folk made a living in such a remote wilderness country later became the subject of much humorous conversation at frequent gatherings of pioneers at Mossyrock, Morton, Randle and Packwood, now well developed towns in and adjacent to the historically famous "Big Bottom Country" of eastern Lewis County. The hog drives over the wilderness "Big Bottom" trail from Randle to Chehalis were recalled again and again by Lewis County old-timers as one of the most distinctive activities of pioneer life in that section of the state.

By LaVonnie M. Sparkman

This technique of moving pork to the market over mountain trails was one of several pioneer skills brought to Southwest Washington by a large group of settlers from out of the the Cumberland and Smoky Mountain country of Kentucky, Virginia, Tennessee and North Carolina. Livestock buyers of the early days in Chehalis trying to furnish pork chops, ham and bacon to the many sawmills and logging camps in Grays Harbor country came to depend on the southerners for live hogs. At a very early time, the Kentuckians and and Tennesseans were able to convince the buyers they could supply pork even though their homesteads were strung out along the Cowlitz River as far as 60 miles from Chehalis. In fact, the best hogs were produced way back in the mountains in the "Big Bottom Country." They ranged through the bottom lands feeding on skunk cabbage and bracken fern roots during the summer. Occasionally, deer were killed and cooked and fed to them. In the late summer, they were finished for market with a diet of corn and potatoes. Then these forest- and ridge-running hogs were gathered in herds of about 100 at Randle and made ready for the 60-mile drive to Chehalis.

LaVonnie M. Sparkman has written six books of East Lewis County history.

ON THIS DAY IN LEWIS COUNTY HISTORY

1890 — Tramps 'Make Night Hideous With Their Orgies'

The Centralia Chronicle wanted the deputy sheriff to take care of the tramps and their noisy camps. "We call the attention of the deputy sheriff to the tramps who nightly congregate under the trees along the banks of the Skookumchuck and make night hideous with their orgies," the newspaper wrote. "One of our worthy citizens who lives in the vicinity caught one last night trying to effect an entrance into his house. He followed the tramp out into the back yard in very abbreviated garments and struck him a French blow which knocked the aforesaid tramp over into the next county."

1909 — Child Apparently Eaten by Cougar in the Cowlitz Pass

Investigators believed a cougar ate a child in the Cowlitz Pass region. "The four-year-old child of Herman Ninemeyer, a well known stockman in Cowlitz pass, was completely devoured by a cougar, according to reports from that section," The Chehalis Bee-Nugget wrote. "Striking down the child with one blow of its cruel paw, sinking its teeth into the little one's shoulder and then tossing her body over its back, the child was carried off to the mountain fastness of Cowlitz pass, ten days ago, and since then not a trace of the child or cougar has been found. Ninemeyer is a stockman who located a rich valley up in the Cowlitz pass."

1931 — Streets Run White as 'Milk War' Rages

A "milk war" was being waged in Southwest Washington, with angry Woodland-area dairymen blockading roads, overturning milk trucks, and manhandling drivers in a strike against Portland milk distributors. Groups of farmers and dairymen had blocked the main Columbia River bridge into Portland in their anger over being paid 3 cents a quart for milk that distributors resold for 8 to 12 cents a quart. With the aid of many unemployed laborers, the dairymen had dumped an estimated 100,000 gallons of milk over three days of chasing down "scab" milk trucks.

1932 — Amnesty Given for Overdue Books

Centralia Carnegie Librarian Bessie Beal Barton declared a temporary end to fees during "Back to Library" week. "The circulation at the public library here is constantly growing each month, more books being circulated than the same month of the previous year, yet the book stock doesn't increase — instead it is decreasing," wrote The Chronicle. If the books were returned by Aug. 15, no overdue fines would be assessed. No questions would be asked. Citizens dropped off their books in the box in the entry hall so no embarrassment would be caused.

1956 — Happy Texans Build Pipeline

The Chronicle praised the "happy and humorous" Texans who had been building an underground natural gas pipeline through Lewis County. With natural gas soon to begin flowing through the line, it would serve as a lasting memorial to "the wonderful summer of 1956 when Texans came to Lewis County, performed their work vigorously, enjoyed life and left with such a favorable impression," The Chronicle wrote in an editorial.

1960 — PUD Building Getting Facelift

The Lewis County Public Utility District No. 1 building on the corner of Pacific and Prindle was undergoing a $55,000 facelift. Merle D. Johnston, PUD manager, said the plans would include adding air conditioning.

1985 — Hot Air Fair Holds Wedding

Susan Blosl and Don Smith, an engaged couple from Tenino, won the Wedding in a Hot Air Balloon contest and were married at 6 a.m. at Stan Hedwall Park, Chehalis, during the annual hot air balloon celebration. After the actual wedding service outside of the balloon, the couple entered the basket of the balloon and flew around the area for a half hour.

'Wimpy Kid' Acts Better On Screen Than On The Page

By John Horn
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Compared with the traditional protagonists of summer movies, Greg Heffley really doesn't measure up. He's a skinny little thing, is no pillar of rectitude and doesn't have much in the way of friends. But to countless young boys, Greg feels like a real superhero, even as he's becoming better behaved on screen than he is in print. Opening Friday, "Diary of a Wimpy Kid: Dog Days" is the third entry in what has been a small but modestly successful series. Adapted from Jeff Kinney's wildly popular illustrated books, the films chronicle the everyday struggles of middle-school student Greg. An admitted underachiever — he'd rather play video games than pretty much anything else — Greg is frequently in trouble with his parents and classmates yet rarely takes much blame. The books and the movies alike throw more than a few scraps toward parents; there's an ongoing joke, for instance, about the lameness of a "Family Circus" knockoff comic that only people of a certain age would get. And for this installment, the "Wimpy Kid," with a budget of about $22 million, will take on those big summer heroes rather than opening in March, where the first two releases in 2010 and 2011 grossed a combined $116.7 million domestically. While the PG-rated, live-action films make a number of narrative leaps from Kinney's six novels (the 41-year-old writer also wrote two "Wimpy Kid" companion books, which have sold a combined 75 million copies in 35 languages, they retain the author's celebration of Greg's defiant if not occasionally unruly deeds. Like a modern-day Dennis the Menace, he's no paragon of pre-adolescence, but his borderline behavior is usually harmless and frequently relatable.

To pay off a debt in the book "Dog Days," for example, Greg considers stealing money from his younger brother's savings or skimming the church collection plate. "All I could think was how I needed that money a lot more than whoever it was going to," Greg writes in his illustrated diary entry. He spends time at the beach with his on-again, off-again friend Rowley not because Greg likes his company — "Believe me, Rowley's the LAST person I want to spend a week with" — but because he will be able to go on a theme-park ride called the Cranium Shaker. "I think he's the rebel in all of us," said Elizabeth Gabler, whose Fox 2000 made all three "Wimpy Kid" movies with producer Nina Jacobson. "He's not perfect. He is lazy, and he is conceited in a way. He's a slacker. But at the same time he's endearing. He's a little bit like Charlie Brown — he's a victim of stronger people around him, like Lucy pulling out the football from underneath him." The third movie — and the second to be directed by David Bowers — is adapted from Kinney's third and fourth books, "The Last Straw" and "Dog Days." The story is largely focused on the combined efforts of Greg (Zachary Gordon) and Rowley (Robert Capron) to avoid being bored silly over summer vacation. The two spend a large amount of time at Rowley's country club, which Greg ultimately sneaks into, where he pretends to have a job and racks up a big bill for poolside beverages. In adapting the books for the screen, the filmmakers have sanded down some of Greg's rougher edges, in part because what he says or does to the two-dimensional stick figures around him in a book plays more harshly when he's doing those things to a living, breathing person on screen. "There are things you can get away with on the printed page that are funny that you can't get away with on screen," said Kinney, who left the screenwriting to Maya Forbes, Gabe Sachs and Wallace Wolodarsky, but consulted with the filmmakers on all three films. "I think he's much more subversive in the books than in the movies." At the same time, Greg learns from his cinematic mistakes, something that doesn't necessarily happen in the books. "I like to follow the beats of a morality tale and run the other way at the end," Kinney said of how he crafts his novels. "One of the reasons I think the books do well is that kids can sense a morality tale from a million miles away. The kids are in on the joke — they know his actions are not meant to be emulated." All true, but family films have different rules. "You've got an imperfect character, and you're trying to make him likable. In a movie, you have to see growth, because the audience expects it," Kinney said of how Greg changes on screen. "They are looking for an emotionally satisfying conclusion, and my books are nihilistic in that way. I'm not looking for an emotionally satisfying conclusion. I'm looking to get a joke on every page."

Kinney, who also launched the kid Internet site poptrippa, grew the books out of an online comic started in 2004. "I really had my sights set on being a newspaper cartoonist, but I couldn't break in, I couldn't get syndicated." He describes the piles of rejection letters as "soul sucking," but the negative responses proved to Kinney that maybe his own shortcomings, rather than the syndicators' lack of vision, was the issue. "I could see for myself why I wasn't getting accepted," Kinney said. "My style wasn't there professionally. If I maxed out at a seventh-grade drawing level, I should accept it." Several movie producers approached Kinney soon after his first "Wimpy Kid" book, published in 2007, started climbing the bestseller charts. Some wanted to turn the book into an animated film, but Jacobson, who also is producing Suzanne Collins' "Hunger Games" trilogy, and Fox 2000 preferred incorporating Kinney's distinct drawings into a live-action film focused on the friendship between Greg and Rowley. "Part of what kids love about Greg Heffley is that he represents every kid's worst alter-ego," Jacobson said. "His imperfections bring a level of honesty to the medium that is rare in literature aimed at children that age." To make a "Wimpy Kid" movie with animation, she said, would undercut that human connection. "It's unique — an anachronism," Kinney said of the choice to make a live-action film. "A movie aimed at families with live actors has become increasingly scarce." Besides the movie, "Wimpy Kids" fans can expect a seventh book in November, while Fox is developing an animated Christmas special for 2013. But "Dog Days" could be the last movie with the present cast, which is aging faster than the characters, or even the last movie adapted from one of the "Wimpy Kid" books. And for all of those critics who say Greg is a poor role model, Kinney has this response: "Bart Simpson has not created a generation of juvenile delinquents."

Aerosmith Ready To Travel To Another Dimension

By Melissa Ruggieri
The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

ATLANTA — Aerosmith is in the midst of a gut-kicking tour and Steven Tyler just announced that he's departing "American Idol" to return to his first love as Aerosmith's ringleader. But what Joe Perry really wants to talk about is the band's new album.

"I'm really anxious to hear what fans have to say about it. It's different than anything we've done in a long time, but the energy that runs through rock 'n' roll has stayed constant through all the years. Mostly by now I'm so sick of listening to the (new) songs, but now I'm listening for the fun of it," Perry said.

He's calling — coincidentally — an hour after Tyler publicized his decision to vacate his post as a judge on "Idol," and Perry has some thoughts about that. And about Aerosmith's tour, with Cheap Trick opening.

But still, for a few more minutes, talk revolves around "Music From Another Dimension," the band's first record of new material since 2001's "Just Push Play," due Nov. 6.

The first single, "Legendary Child," comes equipped with a mini-movie video that uses roller derby girls to tell the band's story — and it's a story tagged with a "to be continued..." coda.

Perry, 61, views the video as a way to reach a younger generation, a group which, interestingly, Aerosmith has never had much of a problem courting thanks to parents handing down the band's musical legacy. They'll also play "Legendary Child" and another new track in concert.

"Every time we go out with a new record, we're re-educating a new generation of fans to the band. A lot of classic rock bands don't have much of a presence now. Then there are the living, breathing bands that create all the time," he said.

The band — Tyler, Perry, drummer Joey Kramer, bassist Tom Hamilton and guitarist Brad Whitford — performed "Legendary Child" on the season finale of "Idol" last year. The song later debuted at No. 2 on Billboard's Hard Rock Digital Songs chart and No. 32 on the Mainstream Rock chart — neither an easy feat for a veteran act.

While Perry believes that Tyler's "Idol" tenure made "people on the street" more aware of the band, he said he hasn't seen an "obvious jump" in younger concert attendees — any more than usual — that would point to an "Idol" effect.

"We really saw it when we did 'Guitar Hero' (in 2008). That really hit our demo," he said.

So speaking of "Idol," Perry hadn't yet talked to his friend about his decision but didn't sound too surprised to hear about it.

"I know he really wanted to go back to the show if they asked him, but then the record started gathering momentum and the thought of going out and being locked into another year ... as much as he enjoyed doing ('Idol'), I think he missed being in the band full time," Perry said, quickly adding, "Not that I ever felt he wasn't present 100 percent for the band." Aerosmith — particularly Tyler and Perry — have long maintained a brotherhood, but their bond is apparently unbreakable.

Perry recently signed a deal to write his autobiography — likely for fall 2013 — and said he plans to be candid about the band's notorious history.

"I expect there will be a fair amount about me and Steven, considering I've spent a good part of my life with him and three other guys," Perry said. "The reality of writing it is starting to sink in, but I'm mostly wondering how much I want to put in the book and what to keep out."

Aerosmith plans to play another short round of dates before the holidays and is discussing a 2013 world tour that will bring the group back to the U.S. with a show underscoring the new material.

The train, obviously, is still a-rollin'.

ADVICE: Dear Abby

Distant Mom Now Reaching Out Refuses To Admit Past Abuse

DEAR ABBY: When I was a child, my mother — a bipolar schizophrenic — abused me. At 12, I decided I had had enough of her mental and physical abuse. A family friend helped me to leave and be placed with my father. I am now 35 and haven't seen my mother since then.

By Abigail Van Buren

A few years ago I wrote her a letter. In it I included pictures of my children, saying I would like her to know her grandchildren. She ripped the photos into pieces and sent them back with a note telling me to leave her alone and that I had "made my choice in life."

Last month, I received a letter from her saying she regretted destroying the pictures and would now like me to send more and she could meet us all. She also asked me for $6,000. She claims I "know" she never abused me and that she isn't mentally ill.

It has taken a long time for me to overcome the things she did to me. Even now, when I drive through the old neighborhoods where we lived — a different one for every grade I went to school — I break down in tears from the memories of her abuse.

Should I write my mother back or just let it go? — ON AN EMOTIONAL ROLLER COASTER IN ILLINOIS

DEAR ON AN EMOTIONAL ROLLER COASTER: Let

it go. Until your mother is well enough to admit what she did to you — and she ISN'T — do not expose your children to her. And as to the $6,000, if you can afford to spend that kind of money, spend it on therapy to overcome the sadness that still lingers from your abusive childhood. If you give it to your mother, she will only ask you for more and more.

DEAR ABBY: My wife, "Diane," and her youngest sister, "Jenny," have grown closer in recent years. Jenny and her husband have been married as long as Diane and I have. Our children are close in age, and none of us is wealthy.

We live in different states. In her attempt to stay connected to Diane, Jenny sends gifts on every conceivable occasion and non-occasion. She sends boxes of cheap items she picks up at her local dollar store — household knickknacks, toys, kitchen gadgets, plastic trinkets and costume jewelry. It's always things we neither need nor use, and the postage probably costs more than the items in those boxes.

Abby, I don't like it. Our home is already jammed with too much stuff. I have told my wife I want her sister to stop sending all that junk. Of course, she doesn't want to hurt her sister's feelings, so she says nothing. I have threatened to tell Jenny myself, but I know that would be a mistake. I don't interact with her and her husband anyway, and we don't communicate well. What can I do? — STUFFED WITH STUFF IN

OREGON

DEAR STUFFED: You can't "do" anything because this is something your wife is going to have to deal with. Diane should tell Jenny that the two of you have reached a point in life where you are no longer able to accept things because you have nowhere to put them, and are now in the process of clearing out items you no longer use. She should tell her sister that when she wants to reach out, please do so on the Internet or pick up the phone.

However, if Sissy refuses to take the hint, you and your wife should look for someplace to donate the unwanted items. A thrift shop, church sale, women's shelter or children's hospital would be ideal — if Diane agrees, that is.
