Ridgefield School District will rerun bond measure in April

THE REFLECTOR

The Ridgefield School District will once again try to get approval for a roughly $62.6 million construction bond, which would fund the construction of a new elementary school and expand the district's high school.

The school board said "painful adjustments" will be necessary if the district can't address overcrowding with the new buildings.

During its Feb. 22 meeting, the Ridgefield School Board voted to place the bond on the ballot in the April 26 special election. The district ran a similar bond for the same amount during the February special election. The measure received about 57.5% of votes in favor, which was shy of the 60% supermajority needed to pass bonds.

In a letter from the district, the board explained April is the latest the district can run the bond for a new elementary school and an expansion at the high school if they want the buildings ready for the 2023-2024 school year.

This rendition of the front of the planned elementary school in the Ridgefield School District shows the building the district hopes to construct if voters approve a $62.6 million construction bond.

The reasoning behind the measure was the same as previous attempts. The district noted its rapid growth remains the chief reason RSD is seeking a bond. The board noted the district's enrollment is over 3,800 students, according to the Office of the Superintendent for Public Instruction. That number is about 36% higher than enrollment in 2017 when the district successfully passed a roughly $78 million bond. That bond was used for the intermediate-grade campus and an earlier expansion at the high school.

Since that time, the district has run four bond measures unsuccessfully, coming as close as only 62 votes shy in February of 2020.

The letter stated the two current elementary schools have a total capacity of about 1,200 people, or about 200 fewer students than what they currently serve. The board anticipates the district will "conservatively" see 600 students join by the 2023-2024 school year.

Rep. Kraft talks governor's emergency powers, 'election integrity' in town hall

rick@thereflector.com

Washington State Rep. Vicki Kraft said she's continuing her push to investigate the state's elections and to rein in Gov. Jay Inslee's emergency powers.

During a virtual town hall on Feb. 24, the Vancouver Republican provided an update on the current legislative session, which is now three-fourths of the way through. Chief among her concerns are the governor's emergency powers, which saw significant use by Inslee during the COVID-19 pandemic.

Rep. Vicki Kraft

Kraft said she sponsored legislation last year that would restrict emergency powers to 14 days with a required two-thirds vote from the Legislature to extend them. This year, she also co-sponsored a bill which would limit a state of emergency to 60 days without an extension from the Legislature. Both bills did not move on.

One bill about emergency powers is still moving through the session. The bill would allow the leaders from both legislative chambers and parties to terminate a state of emergency after 90 days if the Legislature is not in session.

Battle Ground entrepreneur sells boutique items

Stefanie Draper, an entrepreneur in Battle Ground, owns Baileymay's Boutique, which has operated online since July 2021. She started selling her items in a section of Finishing Touch in the city in December of last year.

Draper felt compelled to open Baileymay's to fulfill a need for female consumers in Battle Ground.

"Baileymay's is a boutique store for women's clothing," said Draper. "I decided to start it because I just felt like there was something missing in Battle Ground for women's fashion. It's always been a passion of mine to have a boutique store that is for anybody."

She said her products are targeted toward all women, "not just targeted toward western fashion or high-end fashion, but something for everybody." Her products include hats, cardigans, candles and ponchos.

The name of the business comes from her dog, Baileymay, who is a 13-year-old corgi. She also has a corgi named Teddy, who is 12, and Hondo, who is a 6-year-old English bulldog.

"I grew up on a farm and I love animals, so it started off as something small where I was naming off items like a shirt or pair of jeans after my animals that I've had or my friend's animals, but I eventually ran out of those," Draper said. "Then I started naming them after people I know just to keep it fun and personal, instead of just calling it 'the black flannel shirt.'"

One of her jackets, the Nikki, is named after one of her horses. It has a tan Aztec pattern, which she said comes from Nikki being a buckskin horse. There's also the Macy, a shirt named after a miniature horse she owns.

Draper believes her variety and uniqueness of the items she sells is what separates Baileymay's from its competition.

"When I bring something in, I don't ever really restock it, so there's only going to be two small, two medium, and two large items and once I ship it, it's gone," Draper said. "Once it's gone, it's gone for me, so just keeping things unique and one of a kind for people is what makes us stand out."

Some of the purses she sells are also unique to Battle Ground. They feature a "western" style complete with real leather. She also has wool rancher hats, which are the most popular item she sells.

Draper said she connected with the owner of Finishing Touch, Dianna Perry, after she sold her items at a local event. The two "just hit it off," Draper said. Her section of the store also took off because people were excited to buy the clothes, Draper said, so Perry allowed her to expand her section of the store to sell more items.

"It's a really good working relationship and she has the biggest heart in the world," Draper said of Perry.

Although she enjoys working with and sharing the storefront with Perry, Draper said she plans on opening her own store in the future.

Baileymay's website can be found online at baileymaysboutique.com. Finishing Touch is located at 513 E. Main St. in Battle Ground.

Larch Corrections Center reports dozens of inmates with COVID-19

THE REFLECTOR

Larch Corrections Center is in the midst of a facility-wide COVID-19 outbreak which has infected a significant portion of its inmate population, the Washington State Department of Corrections reported.

During a Feb. 25 update on outbreaks across Washington's prison system, the DOC reported Larch had 87 active inmate cases and four active cases among staff. Inmates who test positive for COVID-19 are temporarily relocated to one unit.

The current outbreak was officially declared at the minimum-security prison by the DOC on Feb. 7. Larch reached a high of 97 active cases on Feb. 18. Active cases dipped to 79 in the department's midweek count on Feb. 23, though the number rose again on Friday, Feb. 25.

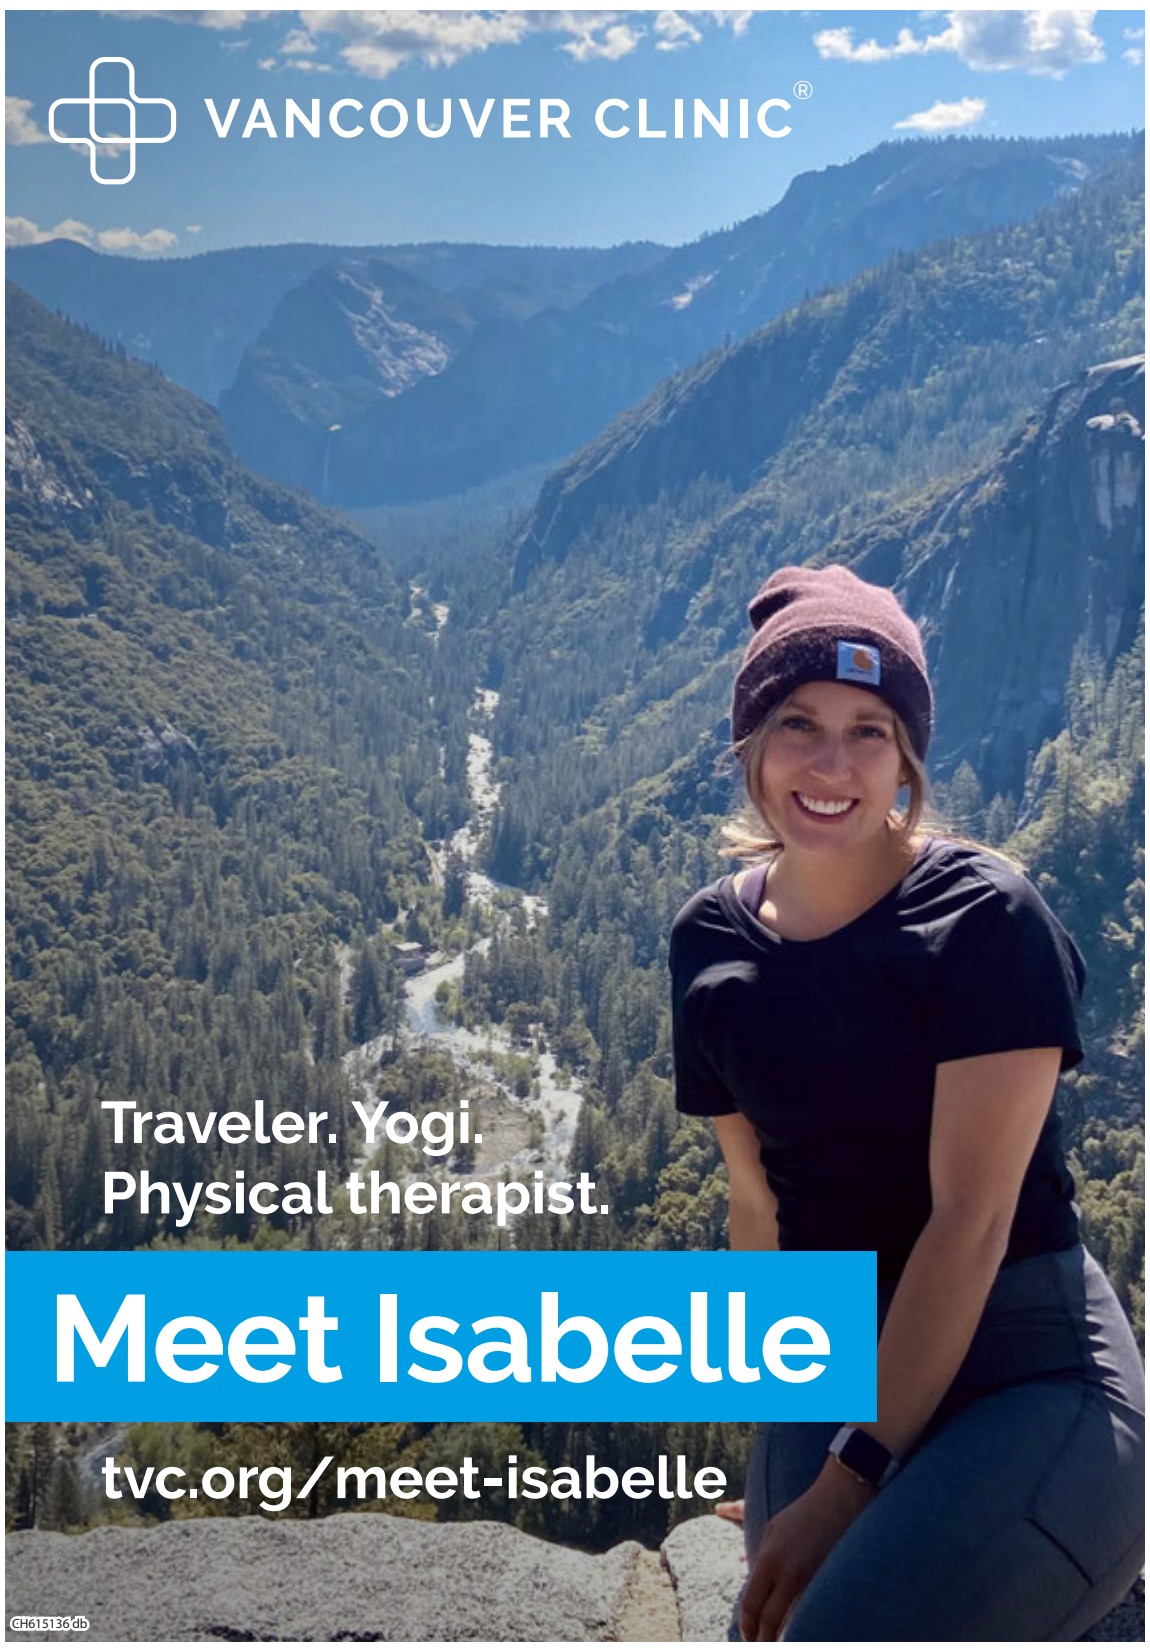

As of December 2020, the latest numbers available from the DOC, Larch had an inmate population of 222 with a capacity of 240.

COVID-19 cases among staff rose by one throughout the week, though it peaked at eight on the first day the outbreak was confirmed.

The facility confirmed 129 cases in the past 30 days, according to the latest data before publication.

Larch has seen a total of 410 COVID-19 cases among its inmates and 68 among its staff since the pandemic began, according to DOC information. The first outbreak at the facility was confirmed Dec. 30, 2020, and ran through Feb. 1, 2021. In that outbreak, 281 confirmed inmate cases were reported.

The state has seen 13,259 inmates and 4,066 staff members test positive for COVID-19 across the prison system during the pandemic. As of Feb. 25, Larch Corrections Center had the largest active outbreak outside of the Washington State Penitentiary. Larch's active cases made up about a quarter of all cases in the DOC.

Hockinson park to receive disc golf course

rick@thereflector.com

Those looking to play a round of 18 will have a North Clark County option, so long as they bring their discs and leave their clubs at home.

During a virtual open house, Clark County staff presented the planned 18-hole disc golf course for Hockinson Meadows Community Park. Forty undeveloped acres of the park, located at 10910 NE 172nd Ave., Vancouver, are scheduled to break ground this spring with the course opening up in the fall.

Clark County Public Works Project Manager Troy Pierce said the development is more than just the course, which will be designed up to Professional Disc Golf Association (PDGA) standards. The project also includes 1 mile of hard and soft trails, a 50-foot bridge that connects the trails and course to the rest of the park, and a 225-square-foot shelter. The course will be located north of the existing playground structure at the park.

A disc golf course is not currently offered by Clark County Parks, Pierce said. During the county's 2015 Parks, Open Space and Recreation plan (PROS) process, a number of participants throughout the greater Clark County area wanted to see a disc golf course put in place.

Frenchman's Bar in west Clark County was initially eyed for the park until it was determined to be better suited for habitat preservation. The Hockinson Meadows location was approved by the Clark County Council in 2016.

In the time since its approval, the initial concept has changed to include the trails and a bridge over a tributary to China Ditch. The additions increased the cost from $70,000 in public funding supplemented by donations to about $455,000, which will be paid out through park impact fees the county collects on new development.

Each hole will include a tee pad, hole marker, bench and basket. The pads will use ecogrid paving and will feature concrete blocks in the center of the pad with gravel fill on the perimeter. Pierce said the pad design was selected because of the wetlands in the course area.

The new trails will link to the existing system in the rest of the park. The course will have the same operating hours as the rest of Hockinson Meadows.

The county contracted with Battle Ground-based Tapani Inc. for construction, which is scheduled to begin May 2, weather permitting, Pierce said. The course is expected to be completed and ready for use in mid-October.

Ryan Weston, a landscape architect for the firm WSP, said no trees at the park will be taken out in order to build the course.

"We tried really hard to maintain all of the natural elements and beauty of Hockinson park that makes Hockinson park what it is," Weston said.

He said his firm worked extensively with the county to maintain the wetlands and other environmental aspects of the area as they devised the course.

Weston also addressed concerns about an increase of illicit activity at the course, which he said would likely be the opposite with "having (more) eyes on the park" from golfers.

COURTESY ART

A course overview for the planned Hockinson Meadows Community Park disc golf course.

The project will rely on existing parking at Hockinson Meadows. Weston said traffic engineers looked at whether parking needed to expand, but determined what was already there is sufficient.

Like the rest of the course, the baskets are also up to PDGA tournament standards.

"They're the highest-quality baskets that are available," Weston said.

He said the architects worked closely with local disc golfers to design the course layout.

"There's a variety of hole lengths, locations and difficulties, so it helps maintain interest in playability for the disc golfers," Weston said.

Ridgefield schools received threats that were deemed not credible

THE REFLECTOR

Ridgefield School District was one of a number of districts across the country to receive threats of violence last week, with local and national law enforcement getting involved in the investigation, a letter from the district stated.

On Feb. 21, Ridgefield Superintendent Nathan McCann sent a letter to district families notifying them that a number of school staff received emails with "threats of harm" at one of the district's schools on Feb. 22. Upon receiving the threat, the district contacted the Ridgefield Police Department, who in turn reached out to the Clark County Major Crimes Unit and the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

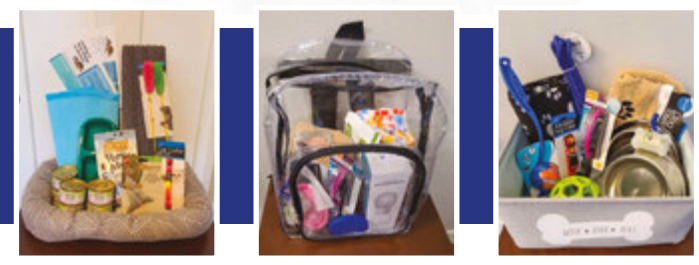

The threat appeared to not be credible, McCann wrote, and similar threats were sent to a handful of school districts across the country. The emails sent were "identical, other than changing the school district name," he wrote, and were sent in a similar fashion as those received by districts as far away as in Georgia and New York.

RSD had additional police presence at its buildings on Feb. 22, the letter stated. McCann said he decided to send his own children to school that day, but stated those who wanted to keep their students home for the day would be able to excuse the absence.

Jack Richards Bratlie had a good life. He was born in Portland, Oregon, to John and Winifred Bratlie on Feb. 26, 1924 and he passed away peacefully Feb. 11, 2022, just shy of his 98th birthday. He was raised in Ridgefield. The Bratlie Bros Mill was co-owned by his father, John Bratlie. The Mill provided employment for many residents of Ridgefield and provided lumber for the war during WWII.

He served in WWII as a navigator on a B-17. He survived a crash landing in occupied Hungary and later attended reunions in Kiskunmajsa with his crew and the families that took them in and fed them. One reunion in Hungary occurred in 1986 during the iron curtain era.

While attending Pacific Lutheran University, he met and married the love of his life, Marion Bratlie. They were happily married for 63 years.

Jack is survived by his five children Barbara, John, Beth, Mark and Eric; four grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

In Loving Memory Of
Aaron J. Larson

1974 ~ 2021

Aaron J. Larson, of Vancouver, Washington, passed away suddenly Nov. 28, 2021 at the age of 47. After a short hard-fought battle with pneumonia he died in the hospital with his wife Sarah by his side.

Aaron, or "Aarie" to a special few people whom he cherished, was born on March 12, 1974 in Vancouver, Washington, to Cliff and Gail Larson. As a boy, he lived behind the Clark County Fairgrounds and made the whole place his playground, from hot wheels cars and his big wheel to bikes and a three-wheeler, there was always an adventure. Aaron early on found love for woodworking. It grew into an amazing talent and a lifelong passion. It started with scrap wood, a can of nails and a toy saw, which little Aaron used to cut down a tree branch in order to build a fort for himself and the neighbor girl to play in. As an adult, Aaron made all kinds of wonderful things from china cabinets to incredibly detailed wooden trucks.

Aaron went to Ridgefield High School and graduated in 1993. During those years, he worked for the Clark County Fair and earned the money to buy his first vehicle, a Nissan pickup. He worked on it with his dad, developing a lifelong love for mini trucks.

In 1993, Aaron began working for A & J Custom Cabinets, where he worked for 28 years. He started in the shop, then became an installer, and after a few years became a draftsman. He created the plans for the cabinets the company built. He was particularly proud of and amused by his custom design of an entertainment center that also functioned as the stairs which led to the second story of a particular home.

The summer of 2014 turned Aaron's world on its head. He took a chance and reached out on Facebook to that neighbor girl from his childhood. Though the fort they used to play in had long ago disappeared, they found that their adolescent friendship had not diminished and they quickly became almost inseparable. Aaron and Sarah Tribe were married that November in Ridgefield, Washington. Aaron instantly became dad to Sarah's seven children who he loved fiercely and was so proud when he became a grandpa to T.J. and then to Elloise.

Before life was filled with kids and family responsibilities, Aaron spent his free time woodworking, fishing, cooking or riding quads in the Oregon dunes with friends. He excelled at all these things. He dreamed about opening a food truck. He was looking forward to the next great adventure. From ribs to unicorn poop cookies, everything he made was the best. Aaron was also the friend you could call or text anytime. He would always be there. It didn't matter if you wanted to vent, to troubleshoot a problem, celebrate an accomplishment, or talk about Sasquatch or a conspiracy theory.

Aaron is preceded in death by his grandfather Bob Nelson, his grandparents Clint and Flo Larson, Stephanie Larson and his dog Nikki.

Aaron is survived by his grandmother Joan Nelson; his parents Cliff and Gail Larson; his wife Sarah Larson; his children Cordero Linnell, John Linnell, Gabriella Linnell, Jasmin Linnell, Kieran Linnell, Alexandrea Linnell and Joshua Linnell; his grandchildren T.J. Walker and Elloise Maloney, and more family and beloved friends than can even be listed.

Aaron was a strong, loving and great man. He is loved and will be missed by so many.

Friends and family are encouraged to share stories and memories on the memorial website: https://everloved.com/life-of/aaron-larson/.

A casual celebration of Aaron's life will be held at the Barberton Grange, 9400 NE 72nd Ave., Vancouver, Washington, 98665 on March 19, 2022 from 2 to 4 p.m. Please come and share your favorite stories, memories and photographs while we visit and share light snacks and drinks.

Community invited to review new BGPS sex ed curriculum proposals

THE REFLECTOR

Battle Ground Public Schools is asking parents and community members to provide input on which of four comprehensive sexual health education curricula it should adopt for fifth- through 12th-grade students.

Those who live in the district are asked to look at and give feedback by March 7 about the sexual health education packages through the district's website, BGPS stated in a news release. Workbooks and teacher guides are available for review at battlegroundps.org/curriculum-adoption.

The curricula under consideration include Check the Facts Middle School; Goodheart-Willcox Comprehensive Health Skills Middle School and High School; The Great Body Shop Middle School; and HealthSmart Grade 5, HealthSmart Middle School and HealthSmart High School.

The district began looking at a middle school sexual health education curriculum last year, the release stated. To keep what's taught at middle and high school levels consistent, the BGPS Board of Directors asked the district to evaluate all of the district's curriculum from fifth grade up.

The district has a committee, which includes parents, community members and staff, who are tasked with recommending a curriculum to adopt. The committee has been working through the year, the release stated. One component of their decision will come from public input.

With approval from the district's instructional materials committee, the proposal from the group tasked with the sexual health education recommendation will go before the BGPS board in the spring, the release stated.

In Loving Memory Of

George S. Shileika

1941 - 2022

George Stephen Shileika died on Feb. 11, 2022, at home after a short battle with cancer with his wife and family by his side.

George was born in New York, New York on Sept. 21, 1941, to George A. and Hilda Shileika. George moved as a young child to the Hiesson area and resided in Clark County the remainder of his life.

George graduated from Battle Ground High School in 1960 and after working various farm jobs, he went to work for Northwest Natural Gas Company. In 2002, George retired from the gas company after 40 years as a Leakage Inspector.

George also served six years in the Army National Guard. He is remembered saying to his great-grandchildren that getting to fire the big Howitzer guns was his favorite part.

George was a devoted, loving husband for 45 years to his wife Crystal (Chris). They enjoyed many trips to the beach, Branson and Nashville, Tennessee. They also traversed to the tropics of Hawaii, Jamaica and the Cook Islands. But most of all he enjoyed the many camping trips to Fort Stevens with his family.

Along with camping, George also enjoyed hunting and casino days as well as working on cars, and showing his pride and joy: a completely restored 1929 Model A hotrod. George won many awards at local car shows. Above all, his favorite time was always spent with his family, three grandkids and eight great-grandkids, where he was known as "Great Papa." George was an incomparable Great Papa and was very involved with all of his grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

George is survived by his wife Chris; son Mike Shalduha; daughter Karyn (Rick) Williams; grandchildren Luke (Katy) Williams, Amanda (Ben) Key, and Samantha Shalduha; eight great-grandchildren Peyton, Colton, Jedidiah, Jameson, Jocelynn, Dylan, Kasey and Broox; siblings Craig, Ona and Bruce Shileika, and numerous nieces and nephews.

The family would like to give our heartfelt gratitude and thanks to the Kaiser Hospice team who helped us all through this difficult time. You are all angels on earth.

George will be laid to rest on March 19, 2022 at a private graveside ceremony for the family. In lieu of flowers, please donate to Kaiser Permanente Hospice at 2701 NW Vaughn St., Portland, Oregon, 97210.

You Know It's Been Said

There is something about humanity that must complain about the most trivial things. We live at a time when what can be commented on becomes subject matter on any number of blogs. This has become fine art; social platforms encourage this form of communication for all wanting to share their experiences. It's entertaining and for the most part it can be educational learning what others have said in regards to what might be of interest. On a similar note, when this writer was much younger, there was a time when a suggestion was made saying it might sound better not to use the words "you know" in casual conversation. Now that this writer is older the same comment is heard while frequently hearing the supposed forbidden phrase by others. It's like going through life never seeing a certain kind of car on the road until it becomes your own, then you see them everywhere. With age and along with the art of critiquing, the words "you know" now stand out and are readily noticed as the familiar phrase gets used more often than not. And now come to find out through observation, "ye know" (Matthew 26:2) gets slipped in or has been used as a sentence starter for a very long time. It's nothing new, what is new is our digital age which has escalated our lack of tolerance, not allowing a person to be who they are without some feedback. Before we read the verse that prompted this subject, let's look at Matthew 7:1-5. "Judge not, that ye be not judged. For with what judgement ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete (out) it shall be measured to you again. And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and, behold, a beam is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye". These days, apparently it doesn't take much to be a hypocrite, we've all been there. These words that come from the Bible would help us navigate around those times where we might practice a little more tolerance as we go forward as we interact with the rest of society. "Tolerance" and this use of the words "going forward" are both commonly heard by a very influential segment of people, as their philosophy is continually placed before the listening public. But to avoid any hypocritical status takes more than a philosophy, it takes sound principle with a growing distrust of self, where self has learned, it is capable of saying and doing the wrong thing at any given time. Philosophy hasn't advanced this world one iota on the selfless scale of righteous, and for this reason the Bible patiently waits, waiting for professors of their own righteousness to learn of the righteousness that comes from God's word. "But we are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousness are as filthy rages" … (Isaiah 64:6). Humanity prides itself on a perceived righteousness. Still, society is grateful for any and all niceties received while sharing this planet, but none of this should be idolized and placed on a pedestal for all to admire, as society lifts up those random acts of kindness. It's hard to see filthy rags when humanity presents motives in a glaring light, but our Father in heaven views it all with no political or social bias. Here's the last part of Isaiah 64:6. "And we all do fade as a leaf; and our iniquities, like the wind, have taken us away". The one that belongs on life's pedestal is Jesus and His righteousness. "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me" (John 12:32). The merits of Jesus were solely the righteousness of His Father in heaven, any righteousness performed of Himself must also be filthy rages. Faithfulness creates perfection, "I can of mine own self do nothing: as I hear, I judge: and my judgment is just; because I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me" (John 5:30). Jesus had just one to answer to, that was His Father in heaven. Humanity is under a similar restraint, we also have one that will be our judge, and that is Jesus. And finality, "Ye know, that after two days is the feast of the Passover, and the Son of man is betrayed to be crucified" (Matthew 26:2). In the words "ye know" similar to, "you know", are evidences of the humanity of God's Son, making His propensities something most of us can relate to when looking at the perfection of the character of Christ.

Duo of educators at TEAM alternative school in Woodland amass 150 teaching certifications

sebastian@thereflector.com

Jillian Domingo and Elizabeth Vallaire, two teachers at Woodland Public Schools' alternative high school, have amassed enough qualifications to teach more than 150 classes covering varying subjects.

TEAM High School, where the duo works, offers students a pathway to a high school diploma that accommodates full-time work, challenges with traditional school schedules or family responsibilities.

To become qualified to teach the different subjects, the educators must get endorsements and approval from the school board.

Vallaire recognizes the need for the program, which provides more opportunities to students and increases accessibility to their education.

"We have this program in our district because we just have a really high population of kids who either work full-time or want to get ahead on credits and graduate early, or sometimes kids who are credit-deficient and need to make up more than one semester of work," said Vallaire. "Other kids have family obligations, have health concerns, and a lot of other different things. We just try to meet the needs of as many kids as we can."

Vallaire said the TEAM staff has crafted a successful program that helps kids who have low attendance or have to take classes outside of regular school hours. Students can go in eight hours a week to get help from teachers, take tests, and take courses online through Apex Learning. Apex offers a wide variety of subjects that can either be done at TEAM High School or at home. Courses include psychology, geography, business, principles of health, and college and career preparation. For more hands-on classes like band, wood shop, and art, Vallaire said students take those classes during regular school hours, since TEAM does not have the facilities to host those classes. There are also advanced placement and honors versions of the classes available on Apex as well.

Although Vallaire teaches biology primarily, which is a subject she is endorsed in, she said the school board votes every year to decide if she and Domingo are able to teach outside of their endorsement. She said that the students already come into the program with a grasp of the material, but need help navigating the topic as they aim to gain some clarification on the subject. Between both Domingo and Vallaire, the teachers are qualified to help the students learn over 150 subjects. According to a news release from the district, the teachers have certifications for each class and the list of classes is 30 pages long. Washington state allows educators to teach certain classes without certifications with school board approval, but the duo was determined to learn as many subjects as possible to better prepare students.

"It's not like they need help learning it. They just need help figuring out how to use Apex to learn further," Vallaire said. "The good news is by teaching them how to learn, I can save myself some time by just showing them how to use Apex itself."

Domingo said TEAM High School has helped students reach their goals ahead of schedule.

"(The students) come into the building, but they can work at their own pace and get different kinds of support, or just a different learning environment that works better for some kids," said Domingo. "The great thing about that is we end up having several kids graduate more than a year ahead of schedule, so they're able to not only work at their own pace but excel in the program and get that done a lot sooner."

Domingo said TEAM also aims to help and accommodate kids with disabilities as well.

"I think that as we grow as a society, we're learning that so many students have learning disabilities and just different ways of thinking than previously thought," she said.

Domingo said her dad, who is dyslexic, was placed into regular classrooms where he often received failing grades back in the 1950s. Now, schools take a different approach.

"There wasn't really any support or anything for him, and nowadays I think we're really good at recognizing all the different types of learning that students have and putting supports in place to really help those students thrive in the classroom, so that they don't just come out of school thinking, 'well I'm bad at this,'" Domingo said. "We give them strategies to be successful and meet them where they're at."

Teaching approaches at TEAM High School vary, Domingo said. Educators can utilize videos, pictures or interactive activities, so the lessons are adjusted to every student's learning style.

According to Vallaire, a third teacher has been hired at the high school who will focus primarily on math and will start at a later time.

In Loving Memory

Melvin Campbell

Melvin Purl Campbell, 63, passed away on Sunday, Feb. 13, 2022, after a brief yet hard fought three month battle with metastasized melanoma. Mel was born Nov. 18, 1958, as number three of four children to Robert and Monty (Moore) Campbell. He was named after his two grandfathers, Lloyd Melvin Campbell and Purl Moore.

Mel was proud to be a Ridgefield Spudder where he attended K-12 and graduated from high school in 1977. He worked for years in the strapping, packaging, and banding industries and traveled much of the U.S. and some of Canada for work. He loved the diversity of jobs, from hay barns to bank vaults to fishing boats, and everywhere in between.

Mel loved his family and friends as well as riding motorcycles, dune buggies, four-wheelers, frequent trips to the sand dunes, duck hunting, fishing, and nature and wildlife, especially the Ridgefield Wildlife Refuge, which was not far from his home. He was social, a friend to many and always so generous with his time, quick to lend anyone a hand, an ear or a laugh. He was handy and always on the go, constantly working on projects around home or fixing his many cars. He moved through his life with ease and kindness, even in the face of hardships and adversities he battled over the years, such as his diagnosis with diabetes and multiple back surgeries which came in his 50s, slowing him down a bit but he never once quit or gave up.

Mel was preceded in death by his mother and grandparents. He is survived by his father Robert; and sisters Connie Zumstein and husband Mike, Gail Como and husband Randy, and Roberta (Bobbi) McKenney; as well as four nieces, four nephews, 12 great-nieces and four great-nephews. Though he never married or had children of his own, he was an amazing uncle and great-uncle and will be deeply missed beyond words.

Mel's celebration of life will be held at 2 p.m. on Saturday, March 5 at Faith Center Fellowship, 11608 NE 107th St., Vancouver, Washington, 98662.

For those wishing to honor Mel, contributions can be made to American Cancer Society online at cancer.org/donate.

Senate, House proposals included $16.75M for 20th District projects, including Woodland Community Library building

BY DANIEL WARN
For The Reflector

Proposed supplemental capital budgets released on Monday, Feb. 21 from the state House of Representatives and the Senate show more than $16.75 million for projects and initiatives in the 20th Legislative District.

The only local item listed in the House's supplemental capital budget is $515,000, which is set to be invested into the Woodland Community Library building project.

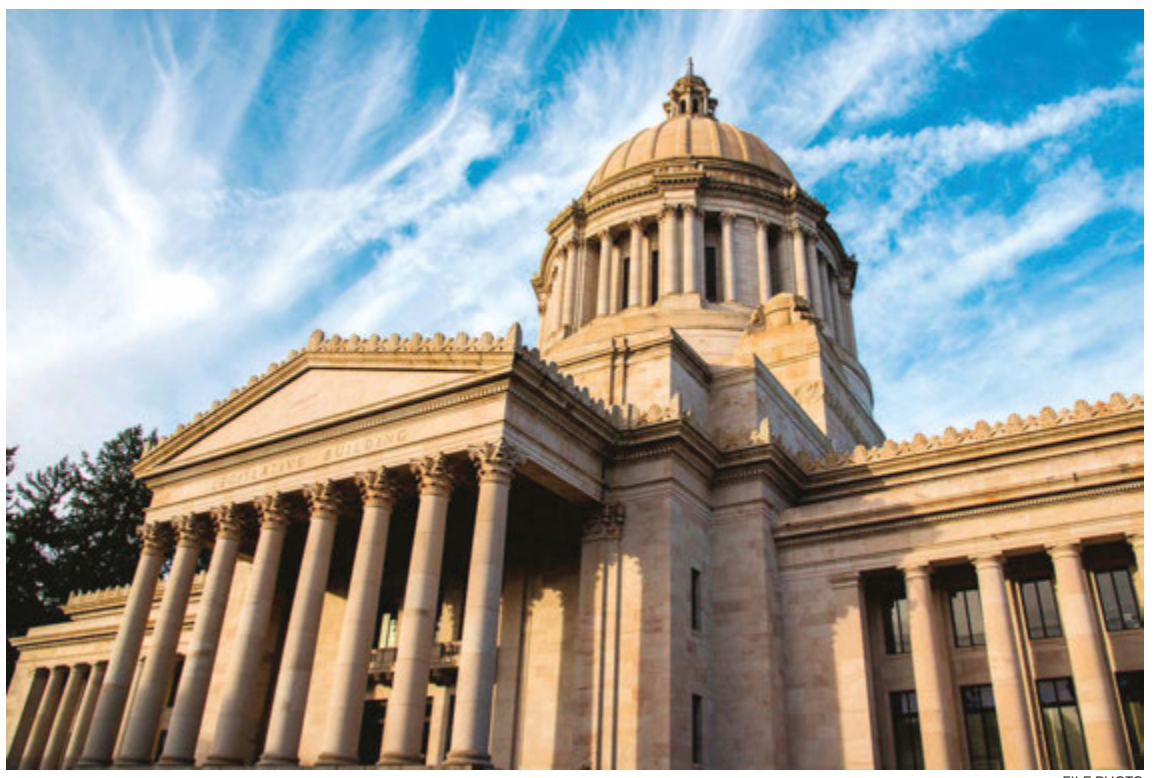

State Rep. Peter Abbarno, R-Centralia, is the assistant ranking Republican on the House Capital Budget Committee. In a news release he said the supplemental capital budget is an important step for the completion of projects in the 20th Legislative District, let alone Washington. The 20th Legislative District covers the north-central end of Clark County and all of Woodland, Ariel and Cougar in Cowlitz County.

"This year's House-proposed capital budget reflects many of our priorities in education, mental and (behavioral) health and housing," Abbarno said. "House Republicans are focused on real solutions for our communities and the state. Our proposed budget focuses on local projects that will create economic opportunities and improve the quality of life for all Washingtonians."

Of the $16.5 million proposed by the House's supplemental capital budget, over $14 million will be spent on just two local infrastructure projects.

Morton is set to receive about $12.4 million for a water system improvement project, while Napavine is slotted for $2 million for upgrades to the Lewis County Fire District No. 5 stations and equipment.

"The next stage of the process is working with our colleagues in the Senate and the governor's office to finalize the capital budget," Abbarno stated. "I am honored to be part of the process and put our communities' values and stamp on this budget."

Family of Jenoah Donald files federal suit claiming wrongful death by sheriff's department

The family of a 30-year-old Black man who was fatally shot by a Clark County Sheriff's deputy has filed a wrongful death lawsuit in federal court, arguing the county fails to train deputies "to use deadly force only as a last resort."

The lawsuit, filed by Tacoma-based Herrmann Law Group in the Western Washington district on Feb. 17, alleges assault and battery, negligence, and deprivation of civil rights. The suit is in connection to the death of Jenoah Donald in February of last year who died following a traffic stop in Hazel Dell.

The lawsuit names Clark County, Clark County Sheriff Chuck Atkins, sheriff's deputies Sean Boyle and Holly Troupe, and several unidentified county employees as defendants in the lawsuit. Boyle shot Donald during the traffic stop, while Troupe said she believed she saw a weapon in Donald's vehicle, which was later identified as a screwdriver.

The plaintiffs in the suit include Susan Zawacky, who is Donald's mother, and the mothers of Donald's three children.

In July, the Washington Association of Prosecuting Attorneys released a report on the shooting where a panel of attorneys from across the state found Boyle acted in "good faith."

At around 8 p.m. on Feb. 4, 2021, Boyle was the first to arrive near the area where police radio traffic indicated suspicious activity near a known drug house, the lawsuit stated. While waiting for backup, Boyle saw a car with a similar description to the one heard over the radio. The deputy noticed the car's right brake light was out, so he stopped the car, which was occupied by Donald.

The lawsuit cites a 1999 court case which found "(a)n officer who lacks probable cause to pull over a citizen for suspicion of drug use cannot lawfully use defective equipment as a 'pretext' for stopping the citizen."

The lawsuit noted Donald had "a talent for mechanical tinkering" and restored cars. The Mercedes Benz he was driving at the time of the shooting was his latest project.

When Troupe arrived at the scene she stepped up to the passenger side of the car while Boyle went back to his vehicle to check information. Troupe noticed an object, which she referred to repeatedly in an investigation interview as a weapon, though photos later showed it was a standard screwdriver, the lawsuit states.

Boyle returned to Donald's vehicle when he heard tension in Troupe's voice, according to the lawsuit. Boyle opened the door and told Donald to get out of the car.

When Donald didn't immediately comply, "(w)ithout further request or explanation, the deputy immediately reaches into the car and grabs Mr. Donald and attempts to physically drag him out," the lawsuit states. Troupe went around to the other side of the vehicle to assist Boyle, as she grabbed Donald's jaw and lifted his head in a "pain compliance" technique.

"Donald does not fight back, but passively resists," the lawsuit states.

A release from the law firm that announced the lawsuit noted Donald was on the autism spectrum and "was prone to withdrawal in stressful situations."

Boyle threatened to release his K-9 on Donald and punched Donald in the face, after which Donald grabbed Boyle's vest, the prosecutors' investigation stated. The lawsuit argues Donald passively resisted throughout the ordeal. Deputy Greg Agar, who had then arrived at the scene, said he saw Donald use his feet to kick or push Boyle away from him.

Troupe said she recalled Boyle's order telling Donald to exit the car or he would shoot him, the lawsuit states.

Donald reportedly turned Boyle so he could not reach his Taser and then Donald started the car, the prosecutors' report stated. The lawsuit questioned whether Donald actually restarted the car, alleging Boyle "apparently neglected to have Mr. Donald turn off the vehicle and/or remove the ignition keys."

"(I)t's implausible that Mr. Donald could pick up the keys and re-start the engine while resisting active force of two deputies," the lawsuit stated.

As the car rolled forward, Boyle drew his gun and fired at Donald. The first round hit the outside pillar between the front and back seats, while a second shot hit Donald in the head.

Boyle said he feared he was going to be dragged by Donald as the car rolled, though the lawsuit disputes that.

"Evidence, however, indicates the deputy was standing outside the vehicle when he shot his weapon," the lawsuit argues. "He admits his feet were 'planted on the ground' and the first bullet strike is on the outside of the pillar."

The lawsuit also disputes that Donald had a hold of Boyle's vest at the time of the shooting, stating neither Troupe nor Agar reported Donald had hands on the vest.

After Donald was shot, the car continued to roll into a yard and knocked over a fence. After being transported to a hospital, Donald died seven days later.

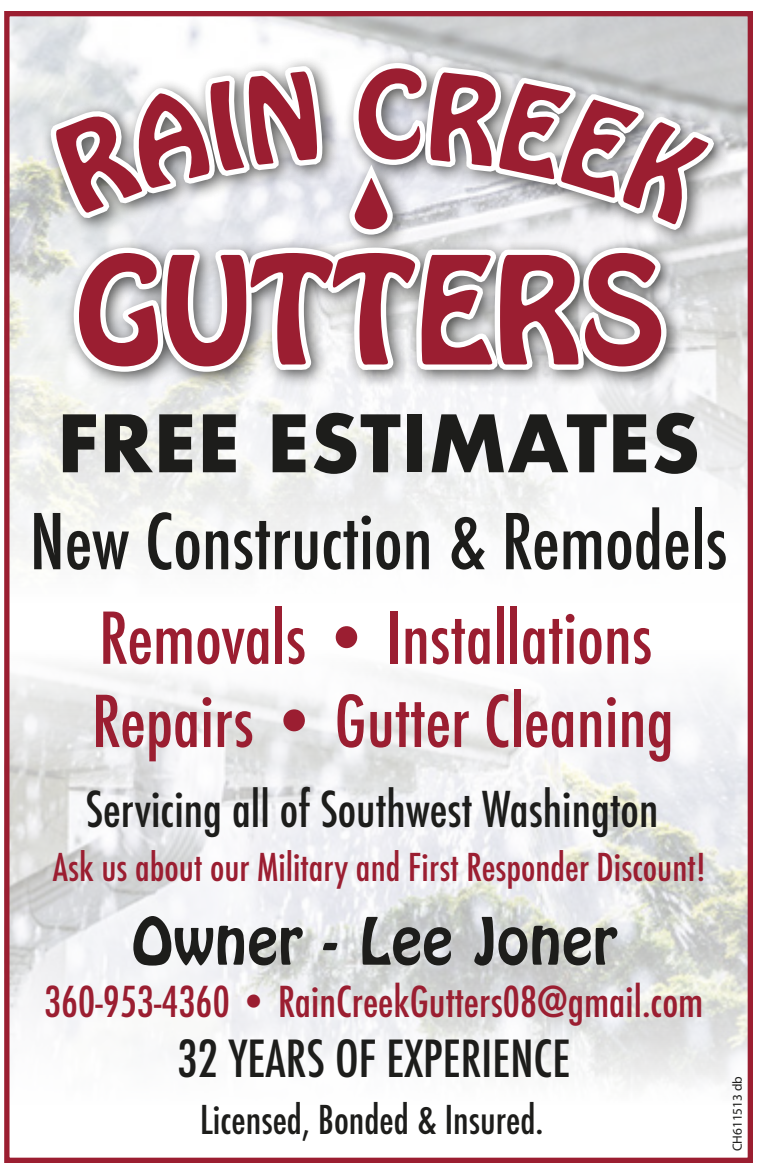

The lawsuit mentions two other fatal shootings by sheriff's deputies. They include that of Kevin Peterson Jr., who was shot while running away after a drug sting in October of 2020, and of off-duty Vancouver Police Department Officer Donald Sahota, who was mistakenly shot by a sheriff's deputy at his Battle Ground home after a robbery suspect arrived at his property in January of this year.

The lawsuit states Clark County fails "to supervise and adequately train officers on de-escalation techniques, non-lethal tactics, the decision making-process preceding use of deadly force, and how to interact with citizens suffering from behavioral health issues such as autism."

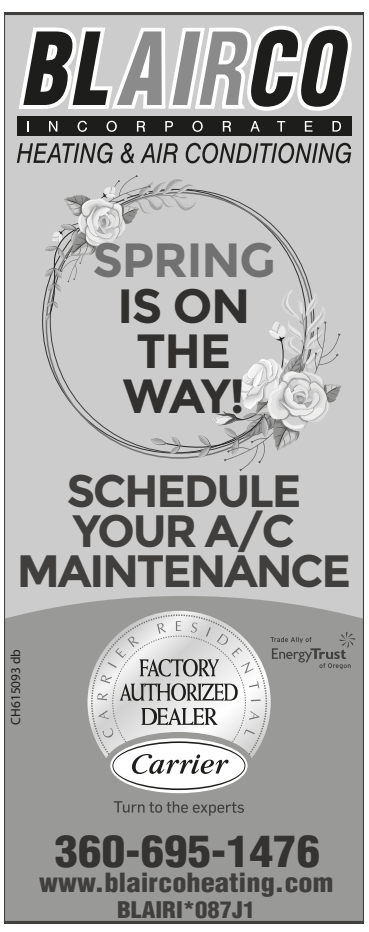

Mark Lindquist, the attorney for the family, stated "this is a bigger issue than one or two officers" in the release.

Donald's family previously filed a wrongful death tort claim against the county. That claim asked for $17 million, while the federal lawsuit does not identify a dollar amount.

"Our hope is that truth and justice prevail, people are held accountable and things change," Donald's mother, Zawacky, stated in the release.

Ridgefield student wins statewide SAR essay contest

SEBASTIAN RUBINO
sebastian@thereflector.com

A Ridgefield High School sophomore won the George S. and Stella M. Knight essay contest for the Sons of the American Revolution (SAR), as she won the state level competition and earned a prize of $1,000.

Elizabeth Swift was compelled to write her essay about enslaved Black Americans who tried to gain their freedom during the American Revolution because of the ongoing civil rights struggles in the country.

"What inspired me was the cultural talks going on such as the Black Lives Matter movement and what goes along with that," said Swift. "I realized, 'what has that issue looked like in the past? How did that look in the era of the revolution? Why do we not know what Black and enslaved people's roles were in the revolution?'"

She wanted to explore the topic to educate herself as she tried to "put the puzzle pieces of the nation's history together."

Swift said she learned about people who "tried to find their own freedom" while the American colonists sought their freedom from Britain.

"There was a large enslaved population and I wanted to know what their take on the revolution was," she said.

To her, they were voices that were silent and went unheard.

According to her essay, John Murray, the fourth Earl of Dunmore, threatened to burn down Williamsburg, Virginia, and free the enslaved people if they joined the British Army after he saw colonists who sympathized with the Boston Massacre.

Swift said her research took "several months" as she worked to unearth the names of soldiers and enslaved people. She utilized the library and a number of online resources. Her research helped Swift develop a better picture of how Black people are treated in the United States today, she said.

"It's another facet of history that if I pick up a book, I'll say, 'I wonder if there's one that has this part of the story in it,'" she said. "It's also about realizing that everybody has a voice, so hearing those voices and learning from them is incredible. I realized that these enslaved people wrote autobiographies of their own, so it's important to read those and not just the standard sources of (colonists) who lived through the war."

Swift said the information she gleaned from the autobiographies of enslaved people gave her "so much more" information than other sources.

Jeff Lightburn, a trustee of the Fort Vancouver SAR chapter, was impressed by the essay that was written by Swift and another student from Seton High School, who won first place in Southwestern Washington.

Josephine "Josie" Abbott, from Seton High School, earned $100 for her accomplishments.

She wrote about Marquis de Lafayette, who was a French soldier that helped the American colonists win the war despite being forbidden by the king. Abbott was inspired to explore the subject after watching a famous play.

"I watched (Hamilton) last year with my mom and I just really enjoyed it," said Abbott. "When I heard about the essay (contest), I was trying to think of something I learned in previous years, and Marquis de Lafayette came to mind. As historically incorrect as Hamilton may be, it was still really fun to watch."

Lightburn said both essays were "incredible."

"Elizabeth took on a topic that can be very sensitive, but she researched it thoroughly and wrote an excellent essay that was balanced and provided an accurate historic picture of the perilous journey that enslaved Black people experienced during the American Revolution," he said. "Our colonies were trying to fight for their independence, and guess what? They were too."

Lightburn said Swift's focus was on a "timely" subject and one that is "relevant" in the country and ever-present in public discourse. Swift's essay will also be used to compete at the national level against other SAR chapters in the country, he said.

He emphasized the essays were written for two "separate, but equally important" categories.

Swift is the daughter of Darren and Evangeline Swift. She is on Ridgefield's basketball and track teams. She also plans to attend the Running Start Program at Clark College.

Each year, SAR invites high school students to submit entries that discuss people or events from the American Revolution or subjects that deal with the U.S. Constitution.

Sen. Patty Murray pushes affordable child care in town hall

RICK BANNAN
rick@thereflector.com

Washington state's senior U.S. senator is continuing to champion legislation aimed at making child care more affordable and accessible.

During a virtual town hall on Feb. 23 focused on Southwest Washington residents, Democratic Sen. Patty Murray said "I'm a mom and a grandmother, and I know that this is one of the toughest times to raise a family that I can remember."

The town hall was hosted by the progressive advocacy group Fuse Washington and provided Murray an opportunity to speak to constituents about her major focuses in Washington, D.C.

The main focus for the town hall was on her work in addressing the costs of raising a family. Murray said she is pushing for an extension on the expanded child tax credit. She said the credit has been impactful in meeting basic needs during the pandemic for a number of families.

"I have talked to so many families who said 'I couldn't afford diapers. I couldn't afford food for my family. My kids are eating breakfast now,'" Murray said.

Murray said her office was "looking everywhere" to see how the credit could be extended.

"If there's one thing we should do as Americans (it) is making sure we take care of our kids," Murray said.

Sen. Patty Murray

Holly Lindsey, an in-home child care provider from Longview with eight adopted children of her own, spoke during the town hall. Lindsey said her operation has been open throughout the pandemic, which has proved a challenge. She said getting supplies for child care has "doubled and tripled" since the pandemic started.

"That has been a huge struggle when we only make very minimal money," Lindsey said.

Lindsey said she is nervous about the end of temporary programs that have assisted child care. She said finding people who are qualified to work with children is its own struggle given the pay available.

"We really need to look at making child care affordable, but also making it where … the providers are paid enough to actually do the job that we are doing," Lindsey said.

Murray said she is focused on rebuilding the child care system, specifically the facilities, which she said could be built through state grants. She is also pushing to lower prices so no one pays more than 7% of their income while still increasing child care pay.

Much of Murray's efforts are tied to the as-of-now not passed Build Back Better plan. Through that plan, taxes would only rise for those who make more than $400,000 annually, she said.

"We're all losing because we don't have adequate child care in this country, and when you do find it, it's extremely expensive," Murray said. "Obviously having a family is your choice, but the fact is if we don't provide the kinds of supports that families need so they can be at work … then those children and that family becomes a burden on all of us."

Murray said she hasn't given up on the Build Back Better plan. She said it is a priority of hers to get something to the president's desk "to give people some breathing room and make sure everyone can succeed in this economy."

Her support of families goes beyond child care. Murray said it is a "national disgrace" that the United States does not have a paid family and medical leave program, a problem which has become more evident because of COVID-19.

"We saw this pandemic expand because people didn't have paid family leave. People were going to work really sick, passing it on," Murray said.

Having that leave is also important to those with newborns so they can bond with their babies, she added.

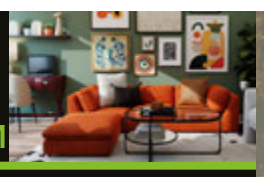

Murray said she is pushing the government to continue providing resources related to the pandemic, in part to keep students in schools. She said she is working with Senate Republicans on the Prevent Pandemics Act, which addresses the shortcomings seen in the federal response during COVID-19.

"People won't have to ask 'where are the tests, where's the (personal protective equipment), what am I supposed to do, who's communicating with who, how do I get information, how do we fix these supply chain issues that we have?'" Murray said. "One thing I think we can all agree on is no one wants to go through anything like this pandemic a second time."

While individuals struggled with job losses during the pandemic, Murray said major corporations ended 2021 with record profits and the top 1% got richer.

"Meanwhile, people who are doing their own grocery shopping and pumping their own gas found their money didn't go far enough," Murray said.

Two Prairie High School wrestlers were named state champions in their respective weight divisions at the 2022 Mat Classic in Tacoma on Saturday, Feb. 19.

Alex Ford, a senior, and Faith Tarrant, a freshman, took first in the boys 3A 160-pound division and the girls 235-pound division, respectively.

"I feel awesome," said Coach Rob Smith about his grapplers' accomplishments. "We haven't had a boys (state) champion since Jay Rogers won it in 1987, and we've never had a girls champion, so Faith is the first."

According to Smith, Tarrant pinned all of her opponents in the tournament and won an overtime match at the end. As for Ford, he went 5-1 in his final match.

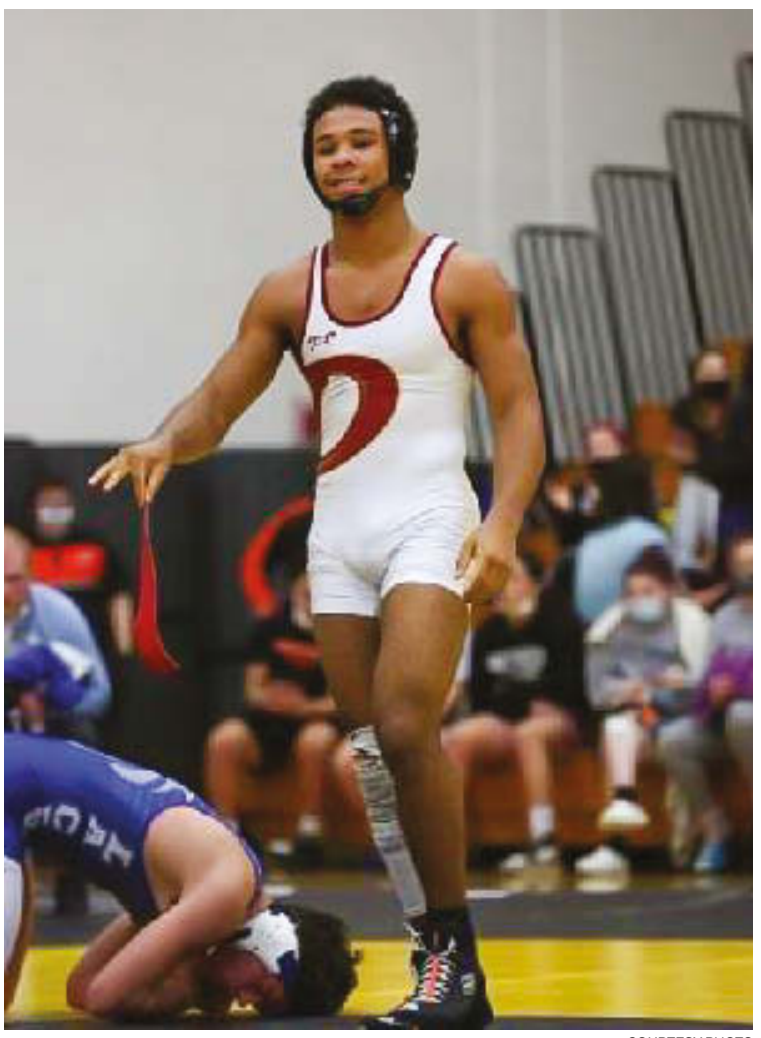

Prairie High School wrestlers Yana Paskar placed second in the girls 145-pound division, Kennedy Wilcox (125) placed first, and Lucas Lyle (120) placed second. Smith said the three grapplers "battled through some pretty tough brackets and came out with a medal."

He said that there were 15 students from Prairie High School who qualified for the state tournament, with 11 boys and four girls. Multiple freshmen qualified for the Mat Classic finals, which Smith said he was proud of as well.

"(The wrestlers are) very hard working," Smith said. "Very determined and very focused on their goals. They put in the work and the time to perfect their skills so that they can place in the state tournament. They're just good kids. I ask them to work and they work. They don't argue with me, they know what they need to do, and they know what they want to get when they're done."

Since a number of younger wrestlers qualified for the state tournament, Smith has high expectations for next year as 10 of the 15 wrestlers are set to return next year.

"I'm really looking forward to seeing an experienced team coming back who know where they want to be and have goals to work every day to get to a state championship," he said.

Alex Ford, a Prairie High School senior, won the state championship in his respective weight division at the Mat Classic in Tacoma.

As for Battle Ground High School, senior Gunnar Henderson placed fist at the Mat Classic in the boys 4A 145-pound division. Owen Wann, a junior, won a match but did not place in finals, while freshman Sonia Rogers made it to the state championship but did not make it to finals.

With how heavily COVID-19 has impacted schools and sports, Battle Ground High School Coach Karl Johnson said they're trying desperately to "rebuild."

"During COVID, Battle Ground has been through a few coaches that left," said Johnson.

That was coupled up with "a weird spring season," which was shut down for two weeks in December and required wrestlers to get tested three times a week.

"It's been a huge burden on the teams," Johnson said. "Gunnar (Henderson) is one of the hardest-working wrestlers I've ever seen, but it's been hard to get matches in front of him because of COVID."

He also believes that the sport changes the kids beyond just learning to wrestle. It teaches them self-control, technique, and conditioning, among other things.

"To work so hard and then to lose, that's hard. To work so hard and to win, and to overcome adversity, these are huge life lessons," Johnson said. "You can look at the greatest senators and people in corporate America, and they all wrestled. As a teacher, I've seen a lot of bad things happen, and I will tell you that my goal as a wrestling coach is to get the kids into something that will change their lives beyond winning a match."

Very few people have beautiful smiles naturally, and teeth that looked whiter during youth can appear increasingly worn and discolored as the years pass by. It is hardly surprising, as each day teeth are exposed to extreme temperature changes, are frequently bathed in acid and are placed under tremendous pressure when biting and chewing food.

Luckily, high-quality custom dentistry can comfortably restore smiles and self-confidence as one patient who visited Dr. Low recently discovered.

Ed Chandler trusted Dr. Low of Above & Beyond Dentistry to care for his dental health, having read only positive things about the practice. When visiting for the first time, Ed immediately felt at home. He explains, "Lisa is a really great first point of contact, and from there my experience just got better. Dr. Low and his team put me at ease right away. I felt good about my decision to move forward with the work I needed done."

Before visiting Above & Beyond Dentistry, Ed feared the dentist having had a horrible childhood experience. Now, he is a regular patient and thoroughly recommends Dr. Low to anyone asking for a new dentist. Ed especially appreciates that Dr. Low always explains what is going on in layman's terms and provides the very best custom dental solutions. After finishing treatment, Ed feels 100% more confident, saying, "It makes me feel good to smile for pictures and any time I want."

USING CUSTOM DENTAL SOLUTIONS TO CREATE BEAUTIFUL SMILES

Dr. Low is an experienced dentist who always goes that extra mile to provide custom solutions for his patients and which include the very latest restorative and implant dentistry treatments. Every smile is individually designed to suit the patient's facial anatomy and goals. He uses the highest quality materials and advanced digital technology, ensuring patients like Ed receive healthy, attractive smiles that last longer.

People have the right to choose what they inject into their bodies

Recently, on Jan. 13, the Supreme Court of the United States issued its decision about the ability of the federal government to mandate vaccinations for approximately 84 million Americans (National Federation of Independent Business versus Occupational Safety and Health Administration). The decision was to not allow the federal government to do this. This effort to force people's compliance was deemed unlawful and that OSHA exceeded its authority to demand it.

Gov. Jay Inslee placed similar mandates into play in Washington state. He did this knowing the vaccination mandate lawsuit trying to stop this action was winding its way through the federal court system. He did not wait to find out if his actions were going to be upheld by the courts. He put it in place and enforced it with the ultimate punishment being loss of your job and livelihood.

The Supreme Court decision makes it clear that his actions are not lawful and that he has exceeded his authority to implement them.

This decision upholds our freedom of choice, and our right to decide, as individuals, what course our medical care and treatment takes. It also is a clear message to Inslee that he must reverse his vaccination mandate.

Not only must Inslee reverse his vaccination mandate, he must rehire state employees that he has caused to be fired, and compensate them for any and all losses that they have incurred because of their dismissal. I am not "heartless" nor am I "biologically ignorant" as Inslee has previously called people that do not agree with his abuse of governmental power to demand vaccinations.

Finally, people have the right to choose what they have injected into their bodies and that right needs to be respected by everyone. Inslee has taken away that right. His responsibility is to restore it and to make whole anyone who was damaged by his unlawful mandate.

I shake my head at the quantity of roadside litter

I moved to Clark County about five years ago and I have adored living in this beautiful part of the country. What I cannot comprehend, though, is how a beautiful, idyllic setting can be so incredibly poisoned by litter. Having lived in six different states, I can say I have never experienced litter on the scale that I have seen in Clark County. Driving along state Route 503, north of Battle Ground, each day to work, I shake my head at the quantity of roadside litter in a rural area.

When I get exceptionally disgusted, I find a sunny afternoon, don my high-visibility vest, and get to work with my picker and trash bag. I have witnessed a handful of other average citizens doing the same and I can only assume that they are as disgusted as I am. Unfortunately, the trash reappears within just a few days. On a few occasions, I've tried discussing the problem with neighbors and local business owners, but commonly hear the excuse "it's the Portland city people." I laugh at this, because I am fairly certain no one drives to Fargher Lake from Portland just to toss their Copenhagen tins and Bang energy drink cans out of the window. Sadly, it is likely it is our own local citizens, who clearly were taught no manners or sense of pride in their local community. Not only is the garbage unsightly, it is dangerous to our environment. Microplastic clogs our waterways, endangering wildlife and even causes minor flooding since the road culverts are literally plugged with trash. I hope any parents who read this will teach and model good behavior for their children and prevent future generations of litterers.

I would like to encourage my local community to get inspired to help out as well. I hope that if enough of us don our bright vests and wield our pickers, it will send a subtle message to the litterbugs that when you toss your Taco Bell cup out the window, it's your neighbor who has to pick it up. Local restaurants and convenience stores should also take ownership and help send a message, as their products contribute significantly to the trash. If there are any local businesses interested in donating trash bags, pickers or high-visability vests, or willing to accept roadside garbage in their dumpsters, or citizens willing to host or coordinate a clean-up, please email me at clarkcountywatrashforce@gmail.com.

Let's urge the state's legislators to make changes in the current session

We have had enough. As founders of a new grassroots organization in Clark County, we are appalled by the recent spike in property crime. It has turned our homes, driveways, garages, and shops into targets for brazen criminals.

We have had it with thefts of catalytic converters and of our cars. These crimes put our families in danger, cost businesses, and destroy our sense of well-being.

Every day, we hear that our neighbors have witnessed shoplifters calmly exiting stores with stolen goods, while we lawfully pay high prices. When our kids see this brazen disregard for the law, what message does that send them?

We are taking action against this collapse in respect for the law. The status quo — in which state laws protect criminals but leave victims of crime unprotected — is dangerous. These criminals carry knives and guns and are mercilessly opportunistic. Innocent victims have already died.

We are now reaching out throughout our region because we know we are not alone in our concerns. We must unite now to rescue our lawful society.

Our organization is called Clark County Public Safety Alliance. The alliance's Facebook page can be found at facebook.com/ccpublicsafetyalliance. There, we provide statistics establishing that property crime has risen. As of 2020, Washington had the fourth highest property crime rate in the U.S., but statistics alone cannot explain the growing empowerment of the criminals in our once-peaceful neighborhoods.

Our town hall on Jan. 12 aimed to get answers. It drew 300 participants to Zoom including over 20 Vancouver businesses and dozens of concerned individuals. The Vancouver Downtown Association, the Chamber of Commerce, the Building Industry Association, and the Clark County Realtor Association were represented.

First, Jill Brown, widow of slain Clark County Sheriff's Detective Jeremy Brown and now full-time advocate for public safety, spoke softly but with unique authority about the role HB 1310, a 2021 bill restricting probable cause, played into her husband's death at the hands of known criminals. "If the car had been pulled over … the guns would likely have been retrieved … and my husband would still be here with us today."

We then sought advice from Clark County Sheriff Chuck Atkins, Vancouver Police Chief James McElvain, and Prosecutor Tony Golik, among others. Our state legislators of both parties commented.

We learned that our aging jail is severely inadequate, leading to many criminals avoiding incarceration. But even more important, we learned that our county and state have the lowest levels of law enforcement staffing in the U.S., and that, despite signing bonuses as high as $25,000, recruitment and retention are lagging.

At the issue's heart is recent state legislation — as many as a dozen bills — that restrict law enforcement from taking effective actions to stop and punish criminal behavior. The criminals have caught on.

The free-for-all must end. Our cities must cite criminals for misdemeanors and hold them accountable for their actions.

Legislative rebalancing is now being discussed in Olympia. According to the Washington Association of Sheriffs spokesman Steven Strachan, the requirements of reform must be, first, "a definition of use of force which is usable and clear; second, allowing for reasonable suspicion and investigative detentions; and, third, a 'balancing test' that while still restricting pursuits," also provides for a rare needed pursuit.

"Currently, the blanket prohibition on pursuits is sending the message that leads to brazen contempt for the law," writes Strachan.

Law enforcement officers are also concerned about decertification while performing their jobs.

On Feb. 8, Strachan reported that "three bills we support, SB 5919, HB 2037, and HB 1788 were all passed out of committee." It's a good start.

Let's all urge the state's legislators to make these changes in the current session.

Vancouver

An unfortunate theme: 'We know better than you'

Chad Taylor

BY CHAD TAYLOR

An unfortunate theme developed in Olympia over the past decade. The theme is "we know better than you." The theme presented itself recently in a marathon floor session in the state House of Representatives. I am proud to say our legislative delegation represented our community very well during the more than nine hours of debate that began at 9 p.m. on a Monday (Valentine's Day) and ended at 6:30 a.m. on Tuesday.

Let me help put the theme in perspective.

In 2016, Washington voters overwhelmingly rejected Initiative 732. The initiative, rejected by almost 60% of the voters, tried to impose a carbon emission tax on the sale and use of certain fossil fuels and fossil fuel generated electricity. The public overwhelmingly, and rightfully, saw this policy as a punishing job killer.

Only two years later, Washington voters overwhelmingly rejected Initiative 1631. The initiative, the Protect Washington Act, failed with over 56% of voters rejecting pollution fees on sources of greenhouse gas pollutants. It would have used the revenue to reduce pollution, promote clean energy and address climate impacts, under oversight of a public board.

Instead of listening to the voters, over the past two years the governor and Democratic majorities in the Legislature passed cap and trade (Senate Bill 5126), low carbon fuel standards (House Bill 1091) and a plethora of extreme environmental legislation to the detriment of the construction industry and trades workers.

In 2019, Washington voters overwhelmingly opposed House Bill 1087, creating a long-term care payroll tax program. Almost 63% of voters wanted the law repealed. Instead, the governor and Democratic majorities in the Legislature delayed the implementation rather than hearing, and passing, Rep. Peter Abbarno's HB 1594 to repeal the insolvent payroll tax program as the voters wanted.

Since 1932, Washington voters have 10 times rejected the opportunity to impose an income tax, and more than 20 local governments have already passed restrictions on such a tax. Regardless, last year the governor and Democratic majorities in the Legislature passed SB 5096, an income tax on capital gains. The law is being challenged in court. This year, SB 5554 was passed by Democratic leaders in the Senate. It would allow for local income taxes.

I could go on for nine and a half hours and describe examples just like our legislators did last week.

This past week, the House debated HB 1837 for nine and a half hours in the House. What could be so important as to debate a bill for nine and a half hours in the dead of night and early hours of the morning? If you listened to all or part of the debate, Abbarno said it is about you.

In 2003, Washington voters passed Initiative 841 by more than 53%. I-841 repealed sweeping state ergonomics regulations and directed the Department of Labor and Industries (L&I) to not adopt new ergonomics regulations unless a uniform federal standard is required.

The cost of those new regulations would cost businesses over $700 million — and that was in 2003. And, as the state supreme court stated in a lawsuit following the initiative, "nothing in I-841 suggests that L&I is stripped of its general regulatory authority to address serious or deadly ergonomics-related workplace hazards" under state law. Therefore, the overregulation found in HB 1837 (passed 50-48) is also unnecessary.

Why would we want the Legislature to pass unnecessary regulations that will cost our community jobs? We wouldn't.

Regardless of your position on specific policies, we should all agree the governor and current legislative majorities are not listening to the will of the people. People feel ignored and there is evidence to support that feeling. We can only hope that next year brings more balance to the Legislature and checks on the executive branch.

Kraft

Kraft said that bill was a "weak, watered-down" version of what she and others have proposed.

"(The bill) pretty much doesn't really change things," Kraft said.

Kraft spoke at length about efforts to support "election integrity" following the 2020 election. She said it began with concerns about Franklin County which used Dominion Voting Systems, a company that has brought defamation lawsuits against news organizations for alleging the company rigged the 2020 election. She said she asked then-Washington Secretary of State Kim Wyman how her office validated those systems in the county and received no response.

Kraft said she introduced a bill this year focused on "proper, comprehensive audits" of election systems that would involve the state auditor in the election process, as well as create an elections auditing board.

"Everybody needs to know that if you are legal to vote … then your voice and your vote should be properly counted," Kraft said.

Kraft noted nothing about election auditing from Republicans is moving along this session.

Kraft addressed statements from Inslee in January where he said he'd support legislation making it illegal for public officials and candidates to knowingly make false statements and claims regarding the election process or results of elections.

"They are very well aware that there are problems in this state, in my opinion. Clearly they are not going to acknowledge it," Kraft said.

She felt the pressure from those questioning election integrity led the governor to back the legislation, which did not make it through the Senate before the session cutoff.

Kraft mentioned she attended the "Cyber Symposium" in August, which was hosted by MyPillow CEO Mike Lindell. It was billed as an event to release "irrefutable" proof that the 2020 election was rigged against Donald Trump. The event has received criticism for not delivering its alleged proof.

Kraft said her trip was approved by the Democratic House majority and cost $1,600 from the state. She said she wanted to attend to "learn more, get a comprehensive snapshot of what Arizona was doing with their reform efforts and audit efforts, meet other legislators who were working on this issue and find out some best practices."

Kraft said it was a "worthwhile investment" as her election integrity bill resulted from the experience. She acknowledged the bill will not move on this session, but felt momentum is building.

"The more we continue the pressure at the local levels … that is going to build a great pathway as we move ahead," Kraft said.

Kraft's stance on elections did not sit well with the final caller of the night, identified only as Chris. He blasted the representative as he said Kraft didn't seem to be acting "in any kind of good faith" with her push on election integrity.

"I see you as an insurrectionist sympathizer, an election fraud fraudster and a conspiracy theory spreader," Chris said.

He added using taxpayer money to attend the symposium trip brought into question her being a fiscal conservative.

"Washington's election was secure, and nobody, even you, has any evidence to the contrary," he said.

Kraft rebutted his statement by saying none of the interactions she had with Wyman addressed the elections accountability issue.

"The bottom line is whether you're a Democrat or you're a Republican or you're an independent … would not we want to make sure that the processes are working as they should, and I would argue there should be no problem with that," Kraft said. "The fact that the governor threatened a gross misdemeanor to silence people like me and others, between that and Kim Wyman going off to work for Joe Biden … I think we have some real problems."

Bond

"The simple math shows that our community desperately needs additional classroom space to support the students who already live here," the letter read.

If the bond fails again, the district "will have no choice but to make some tough and painful decisions moving forward," the letter read.

Though nothing is determined, redrawing school boundaries or moving fifth-grade students back to elementary schools are possibilities, according to the board, which would result in students attending a different school. Student performance and athletic spaces may also have to be converted into classroom space.

"To reiterate, these are not options that we favor implementing. It is simply the stark reality that we are facing as our enrollment swells and our classroom capacities remain unchanged," the letter read.

The board said its members regularly receive emails about a number of issues that aren't related to the district's overcrowding.

"Nearly all of the emails end with the comment that if the board doesn't do what the person wants them to do, they will not ever vote for a school construction bond again," the letter read. "Unfortunately, this is the very definition of what it means to 'cut off your nose to spite your face.'"

Acknowledging the district will address other issues it faces, overcrowding will continue unless new buildings are constructed, the board wrote.

"While there are no simple or perfect solutions to the district's growing pains, we believe that building new schools is the best path forward for students, families, and the Ridgefield community as a whole," the letter read.

Clark County COVID-19 case rate drops back into triple digits

THE REFLECTOR

The number of recent COVID-19 cases in Clark County dipped to levels below the second-highest peak that was reached in September as of the latest health department report.

Clark County Public Health's Feb. 24 report showed 527.4 COVID-19 cases per 100,000 population over 14 days, down from 1,017 reported the week prior. The rate was the fourth week of decline and the first time it has been in the triple digits since Jan. 6.

The latest rate is about one-fifth of the all-time high rate of 2,549.1 per 100,000 reported on Jan. 27.

The seven-day case count also saw a decline, as the health department reported 605 new cases between Feb. 17 and Feb. 24, compared to 2,219 reported between Feb. 10 and Feb. 17.

The update on Feb. 24 included 52 cases that were initially reported as probable based on antigen testing, but were removed from that tally into the confirmed cases category. In the update, Clark County Public Health explained the people originally tested positive based on an antigen test and later received a positive result with a PCR test.

In total, there have been 69,375 confirmed and 14,241 probable cases in Clark County since the outbreak began. As of Feb. 24, Clark County Public Health reported 1,083 active cases, which are ones still in the isolation period. Active cases were about 54% lower than the previous week.

Clark County Public Health's Feb. 24 report tallied five confirmed COVID-19 deaths, lower than the 11 confirmed deaths reported on Feb. 17. The health department also reported five deaths suspected to be due to the disease, lower than the seven reported the week prior.

The additional confirmed deaths included two men older than 80, a man in his 50s, and two women older than 80. The suspected deaths were three women older than 80, a woman in her 60s and a woman in her 30s.

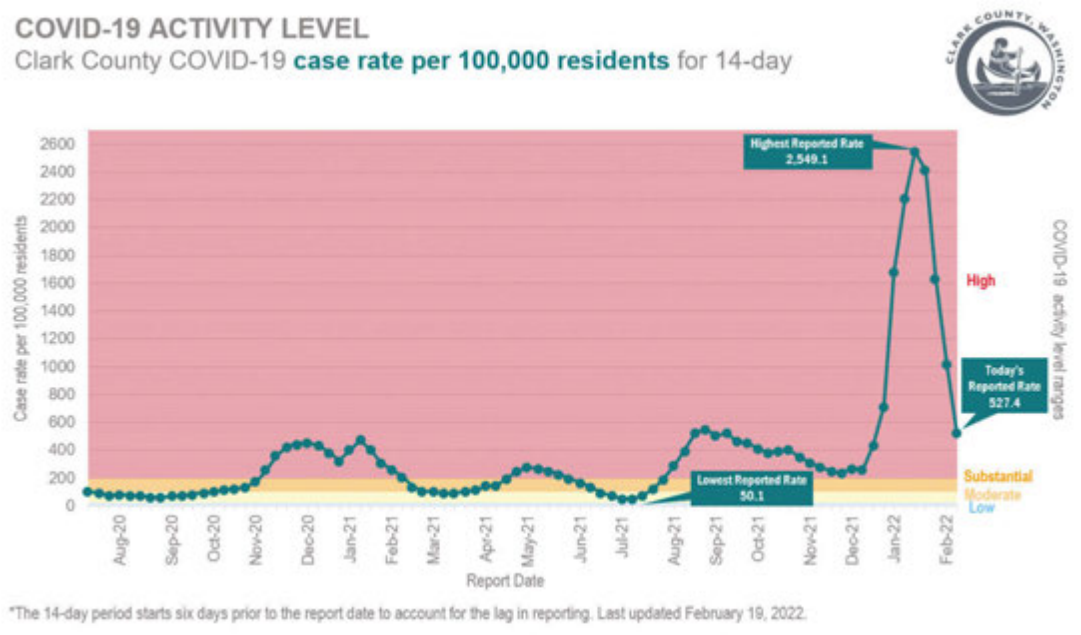

The additional deaths put Clark County's total at 740, including 666 confirmed COVID-19 deaths and 74 suspected to be due to the disease.

The number of COVID-19 patients occupying hospital beds in Clark County saw a decrease in the latest report. As of Feb. 24, 13.9% of beds had either patients with confirmed COVID-19 or patients awaiting test results, down from 26.8% last week. COVID-19 patients occupied 6.7% of intensive care unit (ICU) beds in the county, significantly lower than the 26.9% reported the week prior.

New COVID-19 hospital admissions decreased as Clark County Public Health reported 18.4 admissions per 100,000 population in the past seven days, down from 24 per 100,000 the week prior.

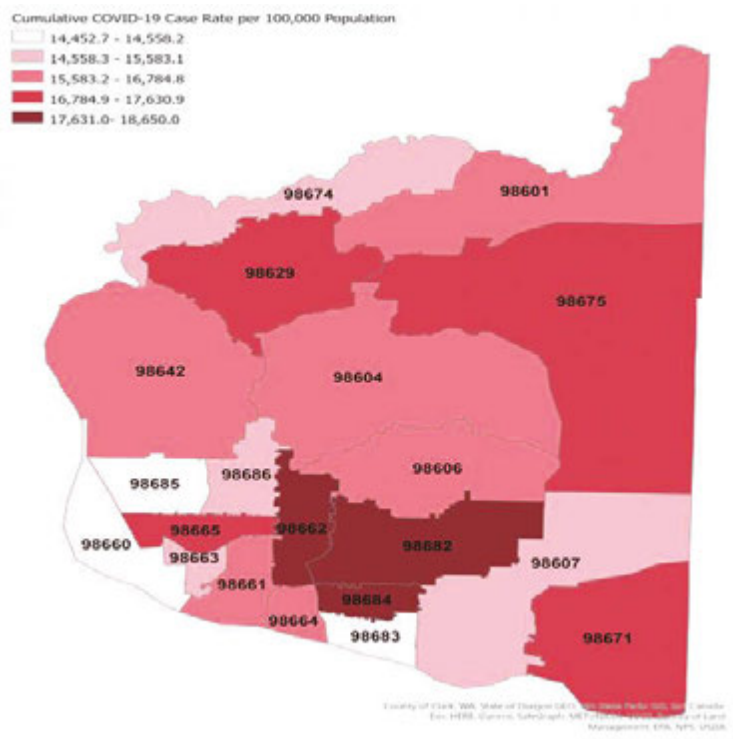

Total hospital bed occupancy in the county increased while the number of patients in the ICU dropped as of Feb. 24. The health department reported 97.8% of hospital beds and 93.3% of ICU beds were occupied in the county, compared to 97% and 96.2%, respectively on Feb. 17.

Clark County's statewide share of confirmed COVID-19 cases and deaths stayed about the same as of Feb. 24. The Washington State Department of Health reported the county had about 5.9% of cases and 6.3% of deaths.

Washington State Horse Expo returns to Clark County Event Center March 4-6

The 11th annual Washington State Horse Expo is scheduled for the Clark County Event Center on March 4-6.

The expo is one of the top equine events in the Northwest and attracts horse enthusiasts from all over the Western United States. The Horse Expo features national experts, first-class entertainment, premier vendors, plenty of shopping, and kid-friendly activities.

Meet the clinicians featured at this year's Horse Expo:

Nationally ranked clinicians will present live demonstrations and host seminars.

Richard Winters: For almost four decades, Richard Winters has been pursuing and perfecting the art of horsemanship. Among his many accolades, Winters won the NRCHA World Championship in 2005 and took top honors at the Road to the Horse Colt Starting Championship in 2009. In 2017, Winters accepted the invitation to be the "director of horse program" at the historic and prestigious Thacher School in Ojai, California where he served as the horse program director for two years.

Megan Pugh: Megan Pugh began riding seriously at the age of 12 and has since trained with and ridden under the direction of Conrad Schumacher, Lilo Fore, Debbie McDonald, Carrie Harnden, Sue Curry, Reta Conner, Christophe Theallet and Alfredo Hernandez. Pugh has ridden dressage from training through to Grand-Prix. She is also a trainer and teacher, who has completed the USDF L program and is continuing and pursuing the judging ladder. She is the founder of Turning Point Equestrian, a successful training and lesson program.

Steve Rother: Steve Rother is one of the country's top horsemanship clinicians. Rother has traveled across the country over the span of decades building his knowledge of horses and finding ways to impart that wisdom to the hundreds of people who look to him for guidance each year. Rother has created many horsemanship programs that help any horse and rider build their confidence together. His Excel with Horses program has helped people create stronger relationships with their horses and gives people the tools they need to work through any problem they may encounter.

Robert Eversole: Internationally recognized clinician, keynote speaker, riding instructor, and author of the best-selling book "The ABCs of Trail Riding and Horse Camping," Robert Eversole coaches horse owners of every experience level on how to enjoy trail riding and camping with equines. Known as "the TrailMeister," Eversole's passion is providing educational and entertaining clinics to help horse owners move past their fears and on to their ambitions and dreams of trail riding and horse camping. TrailMeister clinics are filled with practical, workable information that every rider and camper can use.

Caeli Cavanagh: Caeli Cavanagh's love of liberty work started with the North American Apassionata tour, where she performed with Icelandic horses and loved to watch the liberty teams in the show. Upon returning home, Cavanagh developed her own style and techniques of liberty training based on equine learning theory and behavior. She has performed in various exhibitions across the United States and has been a featured performer at large expos in Iceland. In her riding career, Cavanagh was the third American to attend Holar University College's bachelor's degree program in riding and riding instruction, as well as one of only three Americans with a Level 3 International Training and Teaching Certification from FEIF, the international Icelandic Horse association.

Other entertainment:

On March 5, spectators will be treated to performances during the 2022 Saturday Night Extravaganza featuring the clinicians and special guests at 7 p.m. in the Exhibition Hall. Seating opens at 6 p.m. Admission requires a separate ticket in order to see the Extravaganza. They can be purchased online at clarkcoeventcenter.com.

Jessica Abatie will be at the show. Abatie has worked with some of the best in the business in several areas of horsemanship and has recognized the importance of timing not only in starting colts, but to liberty and timed events as well. Some of Abatie's top achievements have led her to the top in Western Horseman of Oregon, extreme cowboy racing, makeover competitions, barrel races and Omoksee's, where she has won a multitude of titles, saddles and arena records.

Internationally known duo Morgan Wagner and Endo demonstrate more than riding and liberty as they have mastered the art of teamwork. Endo is a 21-year-old Appaloosa who lost both eyes due to Equine Recurrent Uvietis (ERU). He lives a happy, full life despite completely losing his vision. He has starred in a live theater show, performed his liberty work all over the country at events, won a national title at the highest level, and has a huge global following on his Facebook page. Endo and his trainer Wagner will perform his story through liberty work at the Saturday Night Extravaganza, along with daily Endo demonstrations. They will also visit the Kid's Corral to share goodies like a coloring page. The Gypsy Chyx will also be at this year's Horse Expo. The

'Enjoy the journey'

Richard Winters to headline Washington State Horse Expo

Richard Winters is a nationally ranked clinician at horse expos across the country. Winters will headline the Washington State Horse Expo on March 4 through 6.

BY LYNN JENKINS

If Richard Winters could only share one piece of wisdom gleaned from his almost four decades of experience both as a horseman and a teacher it would be "enjoy the journey."

Winters is the nationally ranked equestrian clinician headlining the Clark County Event Center's 11th annual Washington State Horse Expo on March 4 through March 6.

"Developing the skills to be a true 'horseman/woman,' not just a passenger, takes a lifetime," he said. "Don't get so caught up in the destination you forget to enjoy each step along the way." According to Winters, you have to love and find joy in all the little things that come with spending your life around horses.

"For example, I love their smell. I have loved it ever since I was a small boy, using my earned chore money to pay to ride horses at a local rental stable," Winters said.

With a record that speaks for itself there is no doubt that Winters' journey has been a successful one. He won the National Reined Cow Horse Association World Championship in 2005, received top honors at the Road to the Horse Colt Starting Championship in 2009, and was a top-five finalist at the Cowboy Dressage World Finals. Winters is also the author of "From Rider to Horseman," which was published in 2016 by Western Horseman Magazine, and is a nationally ranked clinician at horse expos across the country.

"And yes, 40 years and counting, and I still love how horses smell," said Winters with a laugh.

Along with his passion for horses, he is equally passionate about teaching others. Winters has dedicated himself to honing his horsemanship skills, while passing his knowledge on to others. As a highly sought after horse trainer and horsemanship clinician, known as the "The Masterful Communicator," he has traveled both nationally and internationally to help educate people and improve their communication with their horses

"Horses are no different than us," said Winters. "They have their own emotions and just like us, they have good days, bad days. It is our job to be in tune with their emotions. In other words, to be a good partner.

> "It is very much like dancing. In every successful dance partnership, it is one person's job to be the leader. Riding horses is no different. As a good partner, it is your job to provide clear and consistent leadership."

> — Richard Winters, horse clinician

"It is very much like dancing," Winters said. "In every successful dance partnership, it is one person's job to be the leader. Riding horses is no different. As a good partner, it is your job to provide clear and consistent leadership."

And just like in dance, finding the right partner is as important as the talent and skill a person brings to the dance. According to Winters, he all too often encounters people who are not matched with the right horse, a partnership that is doomed from the start or at least challenged. Maybe the horse is too forward for a timid rider or the horse prefers a whisper and a soft suggestion, but the rider is a little heavier in their communication. Both would do much better with new dance partners, which is sometimes easier said than done.

"We all have a connection with our horses, that although heartfelt, is based in emotion rather than practicality," said Winters. "It is important to realize that it is not a failure on your part or that you love your horse any less."

Winters said people should find someone they trust to help evaluate their current "dance" partner or any potential new partners. That could be a trainer, other experienced horse people, or even someone that is commissioned to help. For people new to horses, Winters suggests they take small steps before jumping right into the deep end.

"Maybe start with some lessons at a local barn. (It's) great exposure to horses and a chance to meet horsey people," he said.

The next step could be leasing a horse. A lease provides a lot of exposure to horses without the long-term financial commitment. The slow induction into the world of horses gives people the chance to find out "if you love their smell," and according to Winters, it provides the opportunity to meet and make connections with people who can help on the journey.

"My own journey has been one of constant learning," said Winters. "I am always looking for people who know more than me and reach out to learn from them. I am constantly learning and challenging myself. The day I think I have nothing left to learn is the day it is time to put up my saddle."

According to Winters, he has had many mentors and people he has learned from over the years, but the most surprising and gratifying horsewoman who is teaching an "old dog" new tricks is his daughter.

"Sarah followed me everywhere around horses starting when she was just a toddler. She never wanted to do anything but ride horses," said Winters. "But the roles are reversed now and she has become my greatest teacher."

Sarah, along with her husband Chris, are both top 10 riders in the national Reined Cow Horse Association. Sarah was also crowned champion in the 2020 world championship Snaffle Bit Futurity.

"In my ongoing quest to learn from the best, my new goal is to become as good a horseman as my daughter," said Winters.

Sarah is not the only one of Winters' kids to make their dad proud.

"Joseph, my eldest, is my own personal superhero," Winters said.

According to Winters, Joseph is a rescue swimmer in the United States Coast Guard.

"He's the guy that jumps out of the orange and white helicopter to save you when you're drowning," Winters said. "The tattoo on Joseph's arm says it all: 'so others may live.'"

Winters said he also loves working with other young riders as he helps them make the transition from passenger to partner, while becoming true horsemen and women.

Winters is concerned, however, about the lack of participation by young people in horse activities of all types, which includes 4-H, reining, and showing, among others. He doesn't know exactly what is causing it. Winters said he does not have all the answers on how to stop the decline in youth participation in horse activities.

"We need to bring our kids back into the horse world. They are our future," Winters said. "Whether it is their smell, or more likely the sense of freedom, adventure … (or) beauty they offer, horses sell themselves. If we expose horses to the younger generation I know they will fall in love with them, just like I did as a young boy so many years ago."

Angel, the mini mare named the face of the Adopt-A-Horse program

BY LYNN JENKINS

Hi everyone.

My name is Angel. I have just been named the "face" of Adopt-A-Horse, a nonprofit horse foster and rescue program. Not to brag, but I overheard people talking and they say I won the job because I am just so dang cute. Their words, not mine.

My story? I'm not sure where to start, but I guess the beginning is as good a place as any. I am a 25-year-old, black and white tobiano mini mare. From the tip of my ears to the ground I am a whopping 31 inches tall. Clark County Animal Control found me locked in a dark stall with two other minis, my best friends Lucy and Ethel, who both have found great, new homes. To be honest, I was so tired, I didn't really care what was going on around me. All I remember from that time was some angry muttering about the floor being 3-feet deep in manure and littered with our teeth.

It was not until later that I realized animal control had taken and delivered us into the care of the Clark County Executive Horse Council's Adopt-A-Horse program, and into the loving care of the true angel in this story: my foster mom Heather Tyrrell.

I am told I was shockingly thin — mere bones — and my rescuers were not sure if I would make it. A nice veterinarian named Dr. Anne Marie Ray of Ridgefield Equine Clinic rated me as a 1.5 on the BCS. I didn't know what that meant and was too tired to care, but later found out they were talking about a BCS score, or an equine body conditioning score, which is a scale that measures equine body weight from 1 to 10.

I don't really like to think about my past. Instead, I like to think about my new life and my own personal angel, my foster mom. My first two weeks with her are still kind of blurry, but I do remember her feeding me small amounts of warm mash around the clock and monitoring my temperature day and night. Apparently, I could not regulate my body temperature and swung widely from violently shivering during hot August days — requiring double blankets — to drenched in sweat and needing to be cooled down with wet towels.

My hero, Heather, stayed with me through it all. Can you believe, thanks to her great care, that meanie Dr. Anne told her to cut back a bit on my groceries? And that I am getting a little chubby. OK, Dr. Anne really isn't a meanie. In truth, she is great, but seriously, a diet?

As I said, I like to think of my foster mom as an angel. It was she who gave me my name. She kept saying I was such a sweet angel and I guess it kind of stuck.

I like it. It reminds me of her when I hear it.

So now I am Angel, the official spokes(horse) for the Adopt-A-Horse Program. I can't wait to start my new life and share my story with the world.

I will be in the kids corral at the Washington State Horse Expo at the Clark County Event Center all three days of the show. Stop by and visit. I can't wait to meet you all.

— Angel

small group of "Gypsy" women has become friends through their common love and passion for the wonderful and unique Gypsy and Drum horse breed. Both are a relatively new breed to the United States and were first imported into the country from the United Kingdom in 1996. They will perform at the expo.

There will also be a draft horse exhibition at the Horse Expo. Draft horses were bred to be working animals for pioneer-era industries like agriculture, large-scale excavation, mining, logging, road construction and building of railways. The average draft horse weighs approximately 2,000 pounds and stands about 6 feet high. Draft horses also served extensively during both World War I and World War II to transport larger guns and heavy wagons. The horses can be seen at the Dr. Jack Giesy Equestrian Arena.

Another event will include the Rother Ranch Race, which is part trail course and part race.

The Preliminary Race Round 1 will take place at 11 a.m. on Friday, while the Preliminary Race Round 2 will take place at 11 a.m. on Saturday. The Final Race Round, which features the top 10 riders from the preliminary race rounds, will take place at 10:30 a.m. on Sunday.

A new addition this year includes the expo's first mechanical bull contest. Contestants will pay a $20 entry fee to test their bull riding skills. Cash prizes will be awarded to the top three finishers. The contest runs from 6 to 8 p.m. Admission to the expo is free after 5 p.m.

During the expo, Beaches Restaurant will serve food and beverages out of the Expo Chuckwagon, DJ Glenn will supply the music, and the vendor marketplace will be open for shopping. The Marketplace at the Expo features dozens of vendors selling products and services for equines, and includes farm equipment, educational materials, tack, accessories, clothing, home goods, and more.

The marketplace will run throughout the horse expo, which is scheduled to go from from 11 a.m. to 8 p.m. Friday, from 9 a.m. to 7:30 p.m. on Saturday and from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Sunday.

Tips to limit distractions while driving

Distracted driving is a significant safety issue. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention indicates about eight people in the United States are killed in crashes that are attributed to distracted driving every day.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration says there were 2,895 distraction-affected fatal crashes in 2019, with distraction-related events accounting for 9% of all fatal crashes in the country. Distracted driving also puts Canadians at risk. Transport Canada's National Collision Database states distracted driving prevalence rose from 16% of fatal collisions in 2006 to 21% in 2016, and those numbers are still climbing.

According to the Insurance Information Institute, distractions are a major safety threat. Eating, talking with passengers, adjusting vehicle controls, and using a mobile phone while behind the wheel are activities that take the driver's attention away from the road. In fact, distractions are broken down into several categories. They include visual distractions, which is anything that takes one's eyes off of the road; manual distractions, which is when a person takes their hands off of the steering wheel; and cognitive distractions, which take a person's mind off of driving.

Drivers can follow these tips to make vehicles distraction-free and reduce the risk for accidents or near misses.

Make adjustments before setting off

Make adjustments to mirrors, radio stations and seat settings prior to driving. In addition, drivers who intend to utilize a GPS navigation system should enter the address and look ahead at the course before getting on the road.

Keep smartphones out of sight

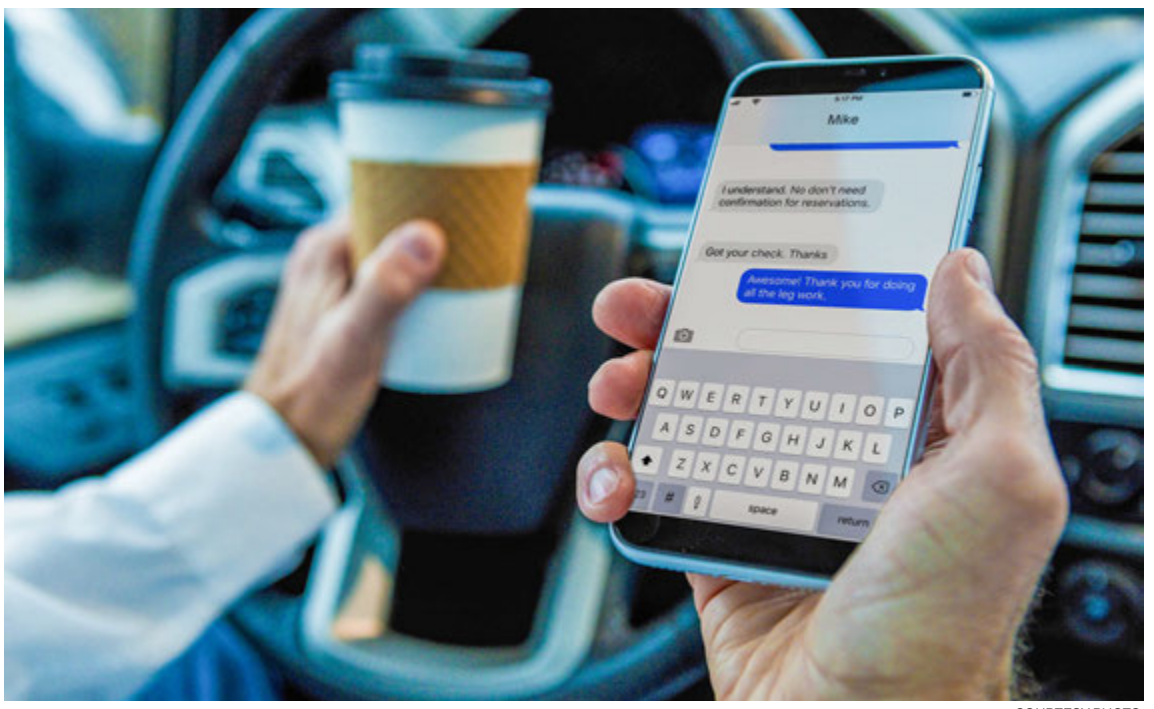

Reducing the urge to check a phone alert or send a text may come down to out of sight, out of mind. Silence the phone and store it in the glove compartment, center console or a purse in the back seat. The phone should not be handled until the destination is reached or the vehicle is pulled over safely out of traffic. Smartphones have settings that can be programmed to send automatic notifications to people contacting the phone owner to say they're driving or temporarily unavailable.

Eat before leaving

Consuming food or drink on the road takes a person's hands off the wheel and eyes off the road. Drivers should try to eat before getting on the road, or pull over to a rest stop for a snack if need be.

Use hands-free devices in emergencies

Many cars come equipped with Bluetooth or other hands-free technology that enables a distress call to be made without having to take hands off the wheel. Many are voice-activated or can be engaged with the push of a button.

Limit passengers

A vehicle full of passengers can be very distracting. It's why many areas no longer allow newly minted teenage drivers to transport more than a few passengers until they're older and more experienced. Limiting passengers even for experienced adults can help reduce distractions as well.

What to do if you spot a dangerous driver

BY DOUG DAHL

Doug Dahl, the Target Zero manager with the Washington Traffic Safety Commission, answers popular travel-related questions.

Q: What action should one take when witnessing severe unsafe driving? For example, on a recent trip I saw a semi truck repeatedly cross traffic lanes, three motorcycles drive in between lanes and cars through traffic, and two cars race ahead at 80-plus mph. Should these incidents just be ignored? Do you call 911 to report unsafe driving? Or, do you stay in your zone listening to podcasts to avoid your own road rage from building?

A: Anyone who has been driving for a while has had a day when you were seriously annoyed by another driver. And there's a good chance there has been a day when you were the annoying driver, too. Hopefully not on purpose, but mistakes are inevitable in life, and if driving is part of your life you'll make mistakes there too.

Then there are times when another driver actually scares you. Maybe you fear for yourself, or possibly you have a vicarious fear for the other drivers on the road. Things like a semi truck drifting into another lane or cars racing down the freeway can do that.

Your question is actually doing a lot of the heavy lifting for me. If you're annoyed by another driver, yes, listen to your podcast, do some breathing exercises, practice empathy and understand that maybe the other driver didn't signal for their lane change because they're thinking about the medical needs of an aging parent, or maybe the driver is a victim of an underdeveloped organ; the brain, in case you're wondering which one. On a related side note, we can get our driver license when we're 16, but the decision-making part of our brain doesn't fully develop until we're around 25.

But if a driver's behavior is posing a threat, 911 is a good choice. We've been taught to call 911 only in an emergency, so allow me to reframe that a bit. If you saw a person walking up to your neighbor's house at night carrying a crowbar would you wait until they pried the front door open to call 911? Maybe it's a crowbar salesman with insomnia, but why not intervene before the sound of splintering wood proves you wrong? Likewise, you'd call 911 if you rolled up on the scene of a crash; consider calling 911 if you observe behavior that's likely to cause a crash.

Much of police work is responding after an incident. Traffic enforcement is one of the few opportunities police have to intervene before something bad happens. On its website, the Washington State Patrol specifically requests that you report aggressive, distracted or impaired drivers.

When you call 911 the dispatcher is likely going to ask you the location you last saw the vehicle, the license plate number (if known), the direction of travel, what roadway, the vehicle color and what happened. The dispatcher will then relay that information to officers in the area.

What can police officers do with the information? They can't just stop a car based on it. By law, an officer can only issue a traffic infraction if they or another officer witnessed it, or based on evidence at the scene of a crash. However, in the sea of cars all doing their thing, your description alerts them to watch for a specific vehicle.

Does it work? It did when I reported an impaired driver to 911. A few minutes later I was called by an officer who had arrested the driver, asking for a statement of what I observed. That's just one example of how we all work together to make our roadways safer.

sebastian@thereflector.com

The Battle Ground Equestrian Team finished its recent meet strong as seniors Angel Halle and Miah Fultz placed first in team sorting, while two teams placed second in the Canadian flag race and freestyle fours.

There are many competitions and the riders must complete all of them in the span of three days.

"There's very different disciplines and possibilities for these kids, everywhere from being slow and collected, to running timed events and doing barrels, or working cattle," head coach Jenna Anderson said. "There's so many variances of what these kids can do in these three days."

One of the events the team competes in is an in-hand obstacle relay. The team consists of four athletes and their horses who take part in a timed trail course. There's also the drill team, which is made up of four to six riders. They do maneuvers on horseback to music, with their drill coach putting the pattern together. Then there's Canadian flags, which is another relay where four riders race from one end of the arena to the other as they grab a series of four flags and attempt to beat the clock. Cow sorting is another event. Riders herd cows in a figure eight into a pen, sorting cows one at a time as they try to secure the fastest time.

In terms of riders, Anderson highlighted Gracie Kemp, who is a senior that "started off being a very timid rider who rode a borrowed horse." Kemp grew her skills and now rides two different horses. She rode one of them for the past three years, and the newer horse is described by Anderson as a "powerhouse" who is fast and "takes a lot of rider to ride."

Anderson said Kemp has grown leaps and bounds. She built a great amount of confidence to win her best personal times this year and also served as a leader for the team.

She also talked about Halle, who is also a senior. Halle had to take on a new horse after her old one developed health issues. The new duo work well together despite not knowing each other long.

"We've seen her making personal strides that we're so proud to see her do, and also becoming a huge leader and taking on the newer kids that came in and taking them under her wing. She's been a huge asset to the team," Anderson said.

Anderson said the team's greatest challenge has been the COVID-19 pandemic, specifically the "limitations" it brings.

"Overall, the kids have really come together with what we're allowed to do and have really made the best of their restrictions compared to what we've been able to do in the past," she said.

Some of the limitations the team faces include the type of arenas they can ride in and the amount of people they can have in the arenas to practice, according to Anderson. Since many of the riders practice as many as four times a week, "it's really a huge commitment for these kids and their families to participate in things like this," said Anderson.

The equestrian team's next meet will be March 11-13 at the Grays Harbor Fairgrounds in Elma, followed by another meet on April 22-24 at the Grays Harbor Fairgrounds. The state competition will be held on May 19 to June 2 at the Grant County Fairgrounds in Moses Lake, and regionals for the The Pacific Northwest Invitational is from June 16-19 at the Grant County Fairgrounds.

No action commenced by the Beneficiary of the Deed of Trust as referenced in RCW 61.21.030(4) is now pending to seek satisfaction of the obligation in any Court by reason of the Borrower's or Grantor's default on the obligation secured by the Deed of Trust/Mortgage. III. The default(s) for which this foreclosure is made is/are as follows: Failure to pay when due the following amounts which are now in arrears: $36,615.32. IV. The sum owing on the obligation secured by the Deed of Trust is: The principal sum of $152,649.67, together with interest as provided in the Note from 8/1/2019 on, and such other costs, fees, and charges as are due under the Note, Deed of Trust, or other instrument secured, and as are provided by statute. V. The above-described real property will be sold to satisfy the expense of sale and the obligation secured by the Deed of Trust as provided by statute. Said sale will be made without warranty, expressed or implied, regarding title, possession or encumbrances on 4/1/2022. The defaults referred to in Paragraph III must be cured by 3/21/2022 (11 days before the sale date), or by other date as permitted in the Note or Deed of Trust, to cause a discontinuance of the sale. The sale will be discontinued and terminated if at any time before 3/21/2022 (11 days before the sale), or by other date as permitted in the Note or Deed of Trust, the default as set forth in Paragraph III is cured and the Trustee's fees and costs are paid. Payment must be in cash or with cashiers or certified checks from a State or federally chartered bank. The sale may be terminated any time after the 3/21/2022 (11 days before the sale date) and before the sale, by the Borrower or Grantor or the holder of any recorded junior lien or encumbrance by paying the principal and interest, plus costs, fees and advances, if any, made pursuant to the terms of the obligation and/or Deed of Trust, and curing all other defaults. VI. The list of recipients of the Notice of Default is listed within the Notice of Foreclosure provided to the Borrower(s) and Grantor(s). These requirements were completed as of 10/13/2021. VII. The Trustee whose name and address are set forth below will provide in writing to anyone requesting it, a statement of all costs and fees due at any time prior to the sale. VIII. The effect of the sale will be to deprive the Grantor and all those who hold by, through or under the Grantor of all their interest in the above-described property. IX. Anyone having any objections to this sale on any grounds whatsoever will be afforded an opportunity to be heard as to those objections if they bring a lawsuit to restrain the sale pursuant to RCW 61.24.130. Failure to bring such a lawsuit may result in a waiver of any proper grounds for invalidating the Trustee's sale. X. NOTICE TO OCCUPANTS OR TENANTS - The purchaser at the Trustee's Sale is entitled to possession of the property on the 20th day following the sale, as against the Grantor under the deed of trust (the owner) and anyone having an interest junior to the deed of trust, including occupants who are not tenants. After the 20th day following the sale the purchaser has the right to evict occupants who are not tenants by summary proceedings under Chapter 59.12 RCW. Washington Firewood Law

State law requires firewood to be sold by the cord or fraction of a cord. A cord is 128 cubic feet, which is a stack 4 feet wide, 4 feet tall, and 8 feet long;. or equivalent. A cord of wood cut 16 inches long would be three stacks 4 feet tall and 8 feet long.

The terms "rack," "unit," "pile," and "truckload" are not to be used when advertising firewood. State law requires that a delivery ticket or sales invoice be presented by the seller to the purchaser at the time of sale. The sales invoice is to include the name and address of the seller, name and address of buyer, quantity delivered, price, and date of delivery. State law suggests that firewood be described for sale by species such as 50 percent oak and 50 percent alder.

Fun By The Numbers

Like puzzles? Then you'll love sudoku. This mind-bending puzzle will have you hooked from the moment you square off, so sharpen your pencil and put your sudoku savvy to the test!

Here's How It Works:
Sudoku puzzles are formatted as a 9x9 grid, broken down into nine 3x3 boxes. To solve a sudoku, the numbers 1 through 9 must fill each row, column and box. Each number can appear only once in each row, column and box. You can figure out the order in which the numbers will appear by using the numeric clues already provided in the boxes. The more numbers you name, the easier it gets to solve the puzzle!
